QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA), 42 U.S.C. 18001 et seq., requires many group health plans and health-insurance issuers that offer group or individual health coverage to provide coverage for preventive services, including women’s preventive care, without cost-sharing. See 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a). Guidelines and regulations implementing that requirement promulgated in 2011 by the Departments of Health and Human Services, Labor, and the Treasury mandated that such entities cover contraceptives approved by the Food and Drug Administration. The mandate exempted churches, and subsequent rulemaking established an accommodation for certain other entities with religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. In October 2017, the agencies promulgated interim final rules expanding the exemption to a broad range of entities with sincere religious or moral objections to providing contraceptive coverage. In November 2018, after considering comments solicited on the interim rules, the agencies promulgated final rules expanding the exemption. The questions presented are as follows:

1. Whether the agencies had statutory authority under the ACA and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, 42 U.S.C. 2000bb et seq., to expand the conscience exemption to the contraceptive-coverage mandate.
2. Whether the agencies’ decision to forgo notice and opportunity for public comment before issuing the interim final rules rendered the final rules—which were issued after notice and comment—invalid under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 551 et seq., 701 et seq.
3. Whether the court of appeals erred in affirming a nationwide preliminary injunction barring implementation of the final rules.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Petitioners are the President of the United States of America; the Secretary of Health and Human Services; the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services; the Secretary of the Treasury; the U.S. Department of the Treasury; the Secretary of Labor; and the U.S. Department of Labor.

Respondents are the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; the State of New Jersey; and the Little Sisters of the Poor Saints Peter and Paul Home.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, ET AL.

*ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT*

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Solicitor General, on behalf of President Donald J. Trump, et al., respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The amended opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 1a-46a) is reported at 930 F.3d 543. The opinion of the district court granting a preliminary injunction (App., infra, 104a-184a) is reported at 351 F. Supp. 3d 791. An earlier opinion of the district court granting a preliminary injunction (App., infra, 47a-100a) is reported at 281 F. Supp. 3d 553.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on July 12, 2019. The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

STATUTORY AND REGULATORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Pertinent statutory and regulatory provisions are reproduced in the appendix to this petition. App., infra, 188a-210a.

STATEMENT

1. a. The preventive-services provision of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA or Act), 42 U.S.C. 18001 et seq., requires many group health plans and health-insurance issuers that offer group or individual health coverage to provide coverage for certain preventive services without “any cost sharing requirements.” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a). The preventive-services provision is part of the Public Health Service Act, 42 U.S.C. 201 et seq., and it is also incorporated into the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), Pub. L. No. 93-406, 88 Stat. 829 (29 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.), see 29 U.S.C. 1185d, and the Internal Revenue Code, see 26 U.S.C. 9815(a)(1). The Departments of Health and Human Services (HHS), Labor, and the Treasury, respectively, enforce and have authority to promulgate regulations implementing the relevant portions of those statutes. E.g., 42 U.S.C. 300gg-92; 29 U.S.C. 1191c; 26 U.S.C. 9833.

The ACA’s preventive-services provision requires covered plans to provide coverage for “evidence-based items or services” that are recommended by the United States Preventive Services Task Force, an independent panel of experts, 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(1); immunizations recommended by an advisory committee of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(2); and, “with respect to infants, children, and adolescents, evidence-informed preventive care and screenings provided for” in already-existing “comprehensive guidelines supported by the” Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA), a component of HHS. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(3); see 47 Fed. Reg. 38,409 (Aug. 31, 1982). In addition, as relevant here, Section 300gg-13(a)(4) requires covered plans to provide, “with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings not described in paragraph (1) as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA] for purposes of this paragraph.” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4).

b. In August 2011, HRSA issued guidelines that adopted the recommendation of the Institute of Medicine to require coverage for women of (among other things) all contraceptive methods approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). See 77 Fed. Reg. 8725, 8725 (Feb. 15, 2012). Coverage for such contraceptive methods was required for plan years beginning on or after August 1, 2012. See 76 Fed. Reg. 46,621, 46,623 (Aug. 3, 2011). At the same time, the agencies that administer the ACA—HHS, the Department of Labor, and the Department of the Treasury—invoked their authority under 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4) to promulgate interim final rules authorizing HRSA to exempt churches and their integrated auxiliaries from the contraceptive-coverage mandate. See 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,623. Those interim rules were finalized in February 2012. 77 Fed. Reg. at 8725.

Various religious groups urged the agencies to expand the church exemption to cover all organizations that had religious or moral objections to providing contraceptive coverage. See 78 Fed. Reg. 8456, 8459-8460 (Feb. 6, 2013). Instead, in a subsequent rulemaking, the agencies made available what they termed an “accommodation,” which was limited to religious not-for-profit organizations that had religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. See 78 Fed. Reg. 39,870, 39,874-39,882 (July 2, 2013). The accommodation allowed a group health plan established or maintained by an eligible objecting employer to opt out of any requirement that the plan “contract, arrange, pay, or refer for contraceptive coverage” by notifying its insurer—or, in the case of self-insured plans, the plan’s third-party administrator—of its objection. Id. at 39,874. The insurer or administrator would then be required to provide or arrange contraceptive coverage for plan participants. See id. at 39,875-39,880.

For certain self-insured plans, however, coverage by the plan’s third-party administrator under the accommodation was effectively voluntary. The authority to enforce a third-party administrator’s obligation to provide separate contraceptive coverage derives solely from ERISA. But ERISA does not apply to so-called “church plan[s],” 29 U.S.C. 1003(b)(2), which it defines to “include[] a plan maintained by an organization” that has as its “principal purpose or function” the “administration or funding of a plan or program for the provision of retirement benefits or welfare benefits, or both, for the employees of a church or a convention or association of churches” and that “is controlled by or associated with a church or a convention or association of churches.” 29 U.S.C. 1002(33)(C)(i); see Advocate Health Care Network v. Stapleton, 137 S. Ct. 1652, 1656 (2017). Thus, in addition to exempting churches and their integrated auxiliaries from the contraceptive-coverage mandate, the agencies in effect also exempted self-insured plans for church-affiliated not-for-profit organizations—such as hospitals and universities—because the agencies could not require the third-party administrators of those plans to provide or arrange for contraceptive coverage, nor impose fines or penalties for failing to do so. See 79 Fed. Reg. 51,092, 51,095 n.8 (Aug. 27, 2014).

The ACA itself also exempted certain other employers from the contraceptive-coverage mandate. The Act exempts from many of its requirements, including the preventive-services requirement, so-called grandfathered health plans—generally, those plans that have not made certain specified changes since the Act’s enactment. See 42 U.S.C. 18011. Grandfathered plans cover tens of millions of people. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47,792, 47,794 & n.5 (Oct. 13, 2017). Employers with fewer than 50 employees also are not subject to the tax imposed on employers that fail to offer health coverage, see 26 U.S.C. 4980H(c)(2) (2012 & Supp. V 2017), although small employers that do provide non-grandfathered coverage must comply with the preventive-services requirement.

2. a. Many employers objected to the contraceptive-coverage mandate on religious grounds and filed suits challenging it. Those challenging the mandate principally contended that it violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. 2000bb et seq. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,796-47,797. A circuit conflict developed, and this Court granted certiorari to resolve it in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682 (2014).

Hobby Lobby held that RFRA prohibited applying the mandate to closely held for-profit corporations with religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. See 573 U.S. at 705-736. The Court determined that the mandate “impose[d] a substantial burden on the exercise of religion” for such employers. Id. at 726; see id. at 719-726. The Court further concluded that, even assuming a compelling governmental interest in “guaranteeing cost-free access to the four challenged contraceptive methods,” applying the mandate was not the least restrictive means of furthering that interest and therefore was prohibited by RFRA. Id. at 728; see id. at 726-732. The Court observed that the agencies had already established an accommodation available to not-for-profit employers and that, at a minimum, this less restrictive alternative could be extended to closely held for-profit corporations that have religious objections to the mandate but not to the accommodation. See id. at 730-731. The Court “d[id] not decide * * * whether an approach of this type complies with RFRA for purposes of all religious claims.” Id. at 731 (emphasis added).

b. Following Hobby Lobby, the agencies promulgated rules that extended the accommodation to closely held for-profit entities that have religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. 80 Fed. Reg. 41,318, 41,323-42,328 (July 14, 2015); see 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,797-47,798. Numerous entities, however, continued to challenge the mandate even with the extended accommodation. Such entities principally asserted that the accommodation made them complicit in providing coverage for contraceptives “because it utilized the plans the [entities] themselves sponsored to provide services to which they objected on religious grounds.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,798. Another circuit split developed, and this Court granted certiorari in several of the cases, which it consolidated. Ibid.; see, e.g., Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 444 (2015).

After briefing and argument in Zubik and the consolidated cases, the Court vacated all of the judgments and remanded the cases to the respective courts of appeals without resolving the underlying merits. Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (per curiam). The Court “d[id] not decide whether [the plaintiffs’] religious exercise ha[d] been substantially burdened, whether the Government ha[d] a compelling interest, or whether the current regulations [we]re the least restrictive means of serving that interest.” Id. at 1560. Instead, the Court directed that, on remand, the parties be given an opportunity to resolve the dispute. See ibid. In the meantime, the Court precluded the government from “impos[ing] taxes or penalties on [the plaintiffs] for failure to provide” the notice required under the accommodation. Id. at 1561.

c. In response to this Court’s decision in Zubik, the agencies sought public comment on whether further modifications to the accommodation could resolve the religious objections asserted by various organizations while providing a mechanism for contraceptive coverage for their employees. See 81 Fed. Reg. 47,741 (July 22, 2016). The agencies received over 54,000 comments but could not identify a way to amend the accommodation that would both satisfy objecting organizations and ensure that women covered by those organizations’ plans receive seamless contraceptive coverage. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,798-47,799, 47,814.

As a result, as of January 2017, the pending litigation concerning the mandate and extended accommodation—consisting of more than three dozen cases, brought by more than 100 separate plaintiffs—remained unresolved. In addition, some nonreligious organizations with moral objections to providing contraceptive coverage had filed suits challenging the mandate. That litigation also led to conflicting decisions by the courts. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47,838, 47,843 (Oct. 13, 2017).

3. a. In an effort “to resolve the pending litigation and prevent future litigation,” the agencies subsequently “reexamine[d]” the contraceptive-coverage mandate’s “exemption and accommodation scheme.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,799. In October 2017, the agencies jointly issued two interim final rules that expanded the exemption to a broad range of entities that have either sincere religious objections or sincere moral objections to providing contraceptive coverage, while continuing to offer the existing accommodation as an optional alternative. See id. at 47,792 (religious exemption); id. at 47,838 (moral exemption); 45 C.F.R. 147.131-147.133.

The agencies explained that their statutory authority to issue “interim final rules,” 26 U.S.C. 9833; 29 U.S.C. 1191c; 42 U.S.C. 300gg-92, permitted the issuance of immediately effective interim rules without the prior notice and opportunity for public comment that is ordinarily required by the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. 551 et seq., 701 et seq.; see 5 U.S.C. 553(b) and (c); 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,813-47,815, 47,854-47,856. The agencies additionally concluded that the “good cause” exception to the APA’s notice-and-comment requirement, 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B), permitted them to issue interim rules without notice and comment in order to protect religious liberty and end the litigation that had beset the prior rules. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,813-47,815, 47,854-47,856. The agencies did, however, solicit public comments for 60 days following promulgation of the interim rules in anticipation of final rulemaking. See id. at 47,792, 47,838.

Pennsylvania brought this suit challenging the interim rules, alleging (as relevant here) that the rules (1) failed to comply with the APA's notice-and-comment requirements; and (2) were arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise contrary to law, 5 U.S.C. 706(2)(A), because they violated the ACA and were not justified by RFRA. C.A. App. 193-196. Pennsylvania sought a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of the interim rules, which the district court granted. App., infra, 47a-103a. The court rejected the government's objection to Pennsylvania's standing; held that the agencies lacked statutory authority or good cause to issue the rules without notice and comment; and further held that neither the ACA nor RFRA authorized the expanded exemption from the contraceptive-coverage mandate. See id. at 66a-91a.

The government appealed the preliminary injunction. The Little Sisters of the Poor Saints Peter and Paul Home (Little Sisters), which intervened in the district court to defend the interim rules, also appealed, and the appeals were consolidated. 17-3752 C.A. Order 1-2 (June 20, 2018); see 888 F.3d 52, 57-62 (3d Cir. 2018) (reversing denial of Little Sisters' motion to intervene).

b. In November 2018, while the government's appeal of the preliminary injunction against implementation of the interim rules was pending, and after considering the public comments received on the interim rules, the agencies promulgated final rules that superseded the interim rules. See 83 Fed. Reg. 57,536 (Nov. 15, 2018) (religious exemption); 83 Fed. Reg. 57,592 (Nov. 15, 2018) (moral exemption).

i. Like the interim rules, the final rules expanded the existing religious exemption to cover nongovernmental plan sponsors and institutions of higher education that arrange student health plans, to the extent that those entities have sincere religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,558-57,565, 57,590 (45 C.F.R. 147.132(a)). The agencies also finalized an exemption for entities (except for publicly traded companies) that have sincere moral objections to such coverage. See id. at 57,614-57,621, 57,630-57,631 (45 C.F.R. 147.133(a)). Both rules retained the accommodation as a voluntary option. See, e.g., id. at 57,537-57,538. And both rules finalized an individual exemption that allowed—but did not require—willing employers and insurers to offer plans that omit contraceptive coverage to individuals who have religious or moral objections to such coverage. See id. at 57,590, 57,631 (45 C.F.R. 147.132(b), 147.133(b)).

The agencies concluded that Congress had granted HRSA discretion to determine the content and scope of any preventive-services guidelines adopted under 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4). 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,540-57,542. The agencies observed that, “[s]ince the[ir] first rule-making on this subject in 2011,” they “ha[d] consistently interpreted the broad discretion granted to HRSA in section [300gg-13(a)(4)] as including the power to reconcile the ACA’s preventive-services requirement with sincerely held views of conscience on the sensitive subject of contraceptive coverage—namely, by exempting churches and their integrated auxiliaries from the contraceptive [m]andate.” Id. at 57,541. The agencies concluded that, “[b]ecause of the importance of the religious liberty values being accommodated” and “the limited impact of these rules,” the expanded exemptions “are good policy.” Id. at 57,552. The agencies also took into account “Congress’s long history of providing exemptions for moral convictions, especially in certain health care contexts,” id. at 57,598, state “conscience protections,” id. at 57,601, and “the litigation surrounding the [m]andate,” id. at 57,602.

The agencies additionally determined that the religious exemption was independently authorized by RFRA. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,544-57,548. They concluded that, “even if RFRA does not compel” the religious exemption, “an expanded exemption rather than the existing accommodation is the most appropriate administrative response to the substantial burden identified by the Supreme Court in Hobby Lobby.” Id. at 57,544-57,545. They further concluded that RFRA in fact required the exemption. See id. at 57,546-57,548.

ii. Following the issuance of the two final rules, New Jersey joined Pennsylvania’s suit. The two States filed an amended complaint challenging the final rules, and they sought a preliminary injunction against their implementation. App., infra, 11a. The district court granted a nationwide preliminary injunction barring the implementation of both rules. Id. at 104a-187a.

The district court again held that the plaintiff States have standing. App., infra, 120a-128a. On the merits, it concluded that the final rules were procedurally invalid under the APA. Id. at 133a-145a. The court determined that, although the agencies had likely complied with the APA’s notice-and-comment requirements with respect to the final rules themselves, the States were likely to succeed on their claim that the final rules were “fatally tainted” by the interim rules, which the court had previously determined were likely adopted in violation of the APA. Id. at 144a. The court further held that the final rules, like the interim rules, are unlawful because neither the ACA nor RFRA authorizes the expanded exemption. See id. at 146a-168a.

Finding that the equities warranted a preliminary injunction, see App., infra, 168a-173a, the district court enjoined the agencies from “enforcing” the final rules “across the Nation,” id. at 185a-186a. The court reasoned that an injunction limited to the plaintiff States would not fully redress their alleged injuries because such an injunction would not reach residents of those States who work for out-of-state employers or students covered under the insurance plans of parents who live out of state. See id. at 174a-184a.¹

4. The government appealed, and its appeal was consolidated with the pending appeal concerning the interim rules. See 17-3752 C.A. Order 2 (Jan. 9, 2019). The court of appeals affirmed. App., infra, 1a-46a.²

The court of appeals held that the plaintiff States have standing to challenge the final rules. App., infra, 14a-22a. On the merits, the court held that the States were likely to prevail on their claim that the agencies lacked statutory authority to promulgate the final rules. See id. at 32a-36a. The court concluded that Section 300gg-13(a) does not confer authority to establish any exemptions to the contraceptive-coverage mandate. See ibid. The court rejected the government’s contention that, if the ACA did not authorize the final rules’ religious and moral exemptions, then it also did not authorize the earlier exemption for churches. Id. at 33a n.26.

² Little Sisters also appealed, but the court of appeals concluded that it lacked appellate standing because of an injunction issued in another case applicable to plans in which it participates. App., infra, 9a n.6.

The court of appeals also held that RFRA did not authorize the religious exemption. App., infra, 36a-42a. The court concluded that the existing accommodation satisfies RFRA, so RFRA did not require the agencies to provide the religious exemption. See ibid. The court did not address the agencies' additional argument that, even if RFRA does not require the religious exemption, RFRA at a minimum permits the agencies to adopt that exemption as a means of eliminating the substantial burden on religion imposed by the mandate. Cf. Gov't C.A. Br. 49-53.

The court of appeals additionally held that the States were likely to succeed in showing that the final rules were procedurally invalid under the APA. App., infra, 23a-32a. The court concluded that the agencies had improperly promulgated the interim rules without first providing the public notice and opportunity for comment required by 5 U.S.C. 553(b) and (c). App., infra, 23a-28a. The court rejected the government's contentions that the agencies were authorized to adopt interim rules without notice and comment based on other statutory provisions, see id. at 23a-25a (discussing 26 U.S.C. 9833, 29 U.S.C. 1191c, and 42 U.S.C. 300gg-92), or the APA's own "good cause" exception, 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B), see App., infra, 26a-28a.

The court of appeals likewise rejected the government's contention that the final rules, adopted after notice and comment, were valid irrespective of any putative procedural defect in the interim rules. See App., infra, 29a-32a. It determined that "deficits in the promulgation of the [interim rules] compromised the procedural integrity of the Final Rules." Id. at 31a-32a. The court concluded that "[t]he notice and comment exercise surrounding the Final Rules d[id] not reflect any real openmindfulness toward the position set forth in the [interim rules],” citing the similarity between the interim and final rules.

The court of appeals concluded that the balance of equities supported a preliminary injunction. See App., infra, 42a-43a. The court determined that the plaintiff States will suffer irreparable harm if the final rules are implemented, and the exemptions are not necessary to protect any legally cognizable interest. See ibid. The court also upheld the injunction’s “nationwide” scope. Id. at 43a; see id. at 43a-46a. It stated that “[a]n injunction geographically limited to the [plaintiff] States alone will not protect them from financial harm, as some share of their residents” are covered by plans of out-of-state employers and may lose coverage and turn to state-funded services if their plans invoke the exemption. Id. at 44a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

In Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (per curiam), and the consolidated cases, this Court granted certiorari to address whether the contraceptive-coverage mandate violated RFRA notwithstanding the accommodation that federal agencies had adopted for entities that objected to the mandate. But the Court ultimately did not answer that question, and instead remanded each case to allow the agencies and other parties to explore potential modifications to the accommodation that might resolve the parties’ disagreements. See id. at 1560-1561. The agencies, however, were unable to find a way to modify the accommodation that adequately addressed the concerns of all sides.

Seeking to resolve the continuing uncertainty and litigation, the agencies subsequently promulgated, after soliciting public comment, the final rules at issue here, which leave the mandate in place but exempt those with sincere religious or moral objections to providing contraceptive coverage. That effort to resolve the controversy through rulemaking was thwarted by the decision below, in which the court of appeals held that the final rules are likely unlawful and upheld a nationwide injunction against their implementation. Litigation over the final rules is also ongoing elsewhere. This Court's review is once again warranted to bring clarity and closure that neither lower courts nor now the agencies can provide.

Indeed, the need for this Court's intervention is even more acute than in Zubik because the court of appeals' decision erroneously restricts the agencies' ability to redress religious burdens caused by the mandate. The court's conclusion that the ACA itself confers no authority on the agencies to recognize conscience exceptions imperils not only the exemptions in these rules, but the longstanding exemption for churches and (in practical effect) self-insured church plans. The court's unexplained holding that the agencies cannot go beyond measures the court determined are compelled by RFRA—in redressing a substantial burden on religion identified by this Court—is also incorrect, and it threatens to impair agencies' ability to address religious objections in other contexts.

The court of appeals' alternative holding—that the final rules were tainted by putative procedural defects it found in the interim rules—is contrary to law and logic, creates a circuit conflict, and casts doubt over many other rulemakings. And the court's affirmance of a nationwide injunction to redress the asserted injuries to two States contravenes bedrock principles of Article III and equity and sweeps far beyond what is necessary and appropriate to redress any harm to them. The result the court of appeals reached—effectively nullifying regulations jointly promulgated by three federal agencies to bring years of litigation to a close—and the multiple errors in its reasoning amply warrant this Court’s review. The petition should be granted.

I. THE COURT OF APPEALS’ HOLDING THAT THE FINAL RULES ARE LIKELY UNLAWFUL IS INCORRECT AND WARRANTS THIS COURT’S REVIEW

A. The Agencies Had Statutory Authority To Adopt The Expanded Exemptions

The court of appeals erred in concluding that the religious and moral exemptions likely exceeded the agencies’ statutory authority. Both exemptions are authorized by the ACA itself, which empowers HRSA to determine which preventive services for women plans must cover. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4). The religious exemption is also independently authorized—indeed, required—by RFRA. The court of appeals’ contrary holdings lack merit and warrant this Court’s review.

1. The ACA authorized the expanded exemptions

a. The ACA’s preventive-services provision states that certain health plans “shall * * * provide coverage,” without cost-sharing, for certain preventive services. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a). For example, for all individuals, such plans must cover preventive services recommended by the Preventive Services Task Force. 42 U.S.C. 300gg(a)(1). In addition, “with respect to women,” the provision requires plans to cover “such additional preventive care * * * as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA] for purposes of this paragraph.” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4).

The statute does not specify any particular types of “additional preventive care” for women that such guidelines must include. Instead, Congress reserved the scope, substance, and enforcement of those guidelines to HRSA—and in turn its parent, HHS. Congress has also authorized HHS and the Departments of Labor and the Treasury to adopt rules implementing (inter alia) the preventive-services provision. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-92; 29 U.S.C. 1191c; 26 U.S.C. 9833.

Together, Section 300gg-13(a)(4) and those grants of rulemaking authority empower the agencies to exempt particular entities from providing services that HRSA’s guidelines would otherwise require. Indeed, since August 2011—when HRSA first issued its guidelines generally requiring coverage for FDA-approved contraceptives, see p. 3, supra—the agencies have exercised their statutory authority under Section 300gg-13(a)(4) by exempting churches and their integrated auxiliaries from the contraceptive-coverage mandate. See 76 Fed. Reg. at 46,623. The plaintiff States have never disputed the agencies’ authority to create that exemption. The agencies properly invoked that same authority in adopting the expanded religious and moral exemptions at issue here.

b. The court of appeals erred in concluding that Section 300gg-13(a)(4) does not authorize the agencies to exempt particular entities from the requirement to cover particular preventive services for women. App., infra, 32a-35a. The court concluded that Section 300gg-13(a)(4) “concerns the type of services that are to be provided and does not provide authority to undermine Congress’s directive concerning who must provide coverage for these services.” Id. at 33a. That is incorrect.

Nothing in Section 300gg-13(a)(4)’s text compels HRSA to require that every service enumerated in its guidelines be covered on an all-or-nothing basis by all plans, or precludes the agency from specifying conditions under which a plan need not cover particular services. On the contrary, the provision’s language requiring that services be covered “as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA],” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4) (emphases added), indicates that the agency may determine the manner and circumstances in which services are covered. Moreover, Congress’s use of the phrase “comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA] for purposes of this paragraph,” ibid. (emphasis added), suggests that the agency can and should consider the context and purpose of the statutory mandate in shaping its guidelines.

Context reinforces the natural reading of the text. Paragraph (a)(4) of Section 300gg-13 contrasts with the preceding three paragraphs, which require covered plans to cover “evidence-based items or services that have in effect” a particular rating “in the current recommendations of” the Preventive Services Task Force; “immunizations that have in effect a recommendation from the [CDC’s] Advisory Committee”; and, “with respect to infants, children, and adolescents, evidence-informed preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA].” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(1)-(3). None of those paragraphs employs the “as provided for” or “for purposes of this paragraph” language that appears in paragraph (a)(4), an omission that courts should presume is purposeful, see Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983).

In addition, each of those earlier paragraphs refers to recommendations or guidelines that were already in existence when the ACA was enacted. In contrast, the “comprehensive guidelines” for women’s preventive services mentioned in paragraph (a)(4) did not yet exist. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(4). Congress thus necessarily vested HRSA with discretion to determine the content of those guidelines going forward. Moreover, two of the preceding paragraphs describe the services addressed in those already-existing recommendations or guidelines as “evidence-based” or “evidence-informed.” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a)(1) and (3). Paragraph (a)(4) lacks similar language, which suggests that Congress contemplated that HRSA could and would consider factors beyond scientific evidence of a service’s medical risks and benefits in deciding whether to support a coverage mandate for that particular service.

The court of appeals emphasized that Section 300gg-13(a) uses the word “shall,” which “denotes a requirement.” App., infra, 33a (citation omitted). That is true but beside the point. The word “shall” imposes a mandatory obligation on covered plans to cover without cost-sharing the services that Congress in paragraph (a)(4) authorized HRSA to specify. But it does not speak to HRSA’s authority to determine whether to support coverage of a service by a particular plan or insurer in the first place. The fact that a covered plan “shall * * * provide coverage” for services that HRSA’s guidelines direct the plan to provide, 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a), has no bearing on whether HRSA may conclude that, for example, churches need not cover particular methods of contraceptives to which they object—as the agencies have done since HRSA first adopted its guidelines in 2011.

As the court of appeals acknowledged, its reading of Section 300gg-13(a)’s text is “facially at odds” with the original church exemption itself. App., infra, 33a n.26. The court suggested that the church exemption might be required by the First Amendment’s Free Exercise Clause, and it pointed to this Court’s precedents affirming “ministerial exception[s]” to other statutes. Ibid. But the church exemption applies to all churches regardless of whether they have a religious objection to providing contraceptive coverage, see 45 C.F.R. 147.131(a) (2016), and thus is not tailored to any cognizable free-exercise concern. If the agencies nevertheless had authority to adopt that exemption in its full scope—which neither the court of appeals nor the States have disputed—then they likewise had authority to adopt the final rules’ exemptions for other, non-church entities that have religious or moral objections to the mandate.

2. RFRA authorized and, for certain employers, required the expanded religious exemption

a. The religious exemption is independently authorized by RFRA, which prohibits the government from “substantially burden[ing] a person’s exercise of religion” unless the application of the burden to that person is “the least restrictive means” of furthering a “compelling governmental interest.” 42 U.S.C. 2000bb-1(b). In Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682 (2014), this Court held that the contraceptive-coverage mandate “imposes a substantial burden” on objecting employers. Id. at 726. The Court further held that applying the mandate to objecting employers was not the least restrictive means of furthering any compelling governmental interest. See id. at 728-732.

In light of Hobby Lobby, RFRA requires the government to eliminate the substantial burden that the contraceptive-coverage mandate imposes on religion.

But the Court in Hobby Lobby did not determine how the government may or must eliminate that burden. Although the Court pointed to the existence of the accommodation as one less-restrictive means of furthering any compelling governmental interest with respect to the employers in that case, the Court had no occasion, and expressly declined, to “decide * * * whether an approach of th[at] type complies with RFRA for purposes of all religious claims.” 573 U.S. at 731 (emphasis added). Nor did the Court suggest that, if the accommodation complied with RFRA in all cases, it would then be the only permissible way for the government to eliminate the burden on religion caused by the mandate.

The agencies reasonably determined that “the most appropriate administrative response to the substantial burden identified by [this Court] in Hobby Lobby” was to adopt the expanded religious exemption rather than merely retain the existing accommodation. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,545. As the agencies explained, “[a]lthough RFRA prohibits the government from substantially burdening a person’s religious exercise where doing so is not the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling interest,” RFRA does not “prescribe[] the remedy by which the government must eliminate that burden.” Ibid. (emphasis omitted). “The prior administration chose” to attempt to comply with RFRA “through the complex accommodation,” but RFRA did not “compel[] that novel choice or prohibit[] the current administration from employing the more straightforward choice of an exemption—much like the existing and unchallenged exemption for churches.” Ibid. After all, had the agencies adopted the religious exemption from the outset, “no one could reasonably have argued that doing so was improper because they should have invented the accommodation instead,” and nothing in RFRA “compels a different result now based merely on path dependence.” Ibid. The agencies thus correctly concluded that, regardless of whether RFRA requires the expanded religious exemption (or would be satisfied by the accommodation), RFRA at least permits them to adopt the exemption to satisfy their duty to eliminate the substantial burden on religion caused by the mandate. Id. at 57,544-57,545.

The agencies’ decision to adopt the religious exemption in their discretion—even if it was not required by RFRA—was especially reasonable in light of the “continued litigation” and “legal uncertainty” over whether the existing accommodation violates RFRA. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,545; see Ricci v. DeStefano, 557 U.S. 557, 585 (2009). In Ricci, this Court recognized that an entity faced with potentially conflicting statutory obligations should be afforded some leeway in resolving that conflict. Ibid. “[T]o resolve any conflict between the disparate-treatment and disparate-impact provisions of” Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq., the Court held that an employer need only have a strong basis to believe that an employment practice violates the disparate-impact ban in order to take certain types of remedial action that would otherwise violate its disparate-treatment ban. 557 U.S. at 584; see id. at 583-585. Here, likewise, the agencies reasonably responded to the considerable doubt about the accommodation’s legality by adopting the religious exemption. Cf. Walz v. Tax Comm’n, 397 U.S. 664, 669 (1970) (recognizing “room for play in the joints” when accommodating exercise of religion).

To be sure, RFRA would not prohibit applying the contraceptive mandate to a particular employer if the agencies carried their burden of “demonstrat[ing] that application of the” mandate to that employer both “is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest” and “is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest.” 42 U.S.C. 2000bb-1(b). But, as the agencies found, application of the mandate to objecting entities neither serves a compelling governmental interest nor is narrowly tailored to any such interest. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,546-57,548. As they explained, Congress itself did not mandate coverage of contraceptives, and the mandate is already inapplicable to various plans, including church and other plans that have always been actually or effectively exempt and “grandfathered plans” (which are exempt from the preventive-services mandate altogether). Id. at 57,546-57,547. Moreover, some entities that object to providing coverage for certain methods of contraception may not object to others, and various federal, state, and local programs provide free or subsidized contraceptives to low-income women. Id. at 57,548.

b. The court of appeals held that RFRA does not authorize the religious exemption, reasoning that the existing accommodation satisfies RFRA and therefore “RFRA does not require” the agencies to go further by adopting the religious exemption. App., infra, 39a (emphasis added); see id. at 36a-41a. But the court never confronted the agencies’ determination in the final rule that, “even if RFRA does not compel” the exemption, RFRA at least permits them to adopt it. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,544. The court erred by focusing exclusively on whether the accommodation itself imposes a substantial burden on religion that must be remedied under RFRA. See App., infra, 38a-41a. The court never explained why the agencies lack discretion to eliminate the underlying substantial burden on religion caused by the contraceptive mandate, which this Court recognized in Hobby Lobby, by adopting the exemption.

In any event, the court of appeals' conclusion that the accommodation complies with RFRA in all cases is incorrect. As the agencies explained, the accommodation does violate RFRA with respect to at least some employers. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,545-57,548. Specifically, an employer that objects on religious grounds to providing coverage for certain contraceptives may sincerely believe that using the plan sponsored by that employer to provide such coverage makes the employer complicit in providing contraceptive coverage. See id. at 57,546. In light of that sincere religious belief, requiring the employer "to choose between the Mandate, the accommodation, or incurring penalties for noncompliance imposes a substantial burden on religious exercise under RFRA." Ibid.; see 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,798, 47,800; accord Sharpe Holdings, Inc. v. HHS, 801 F.3d 927, 939-943 (8th Cir. 2015), vacated and remanded sub nom. HHS v. CNS Int'l Ministries, 136 S. Ct. 2006 (2016); Priests for Life v. HHS, 808 F.3d 1, 16-21 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc). Indeed, after extensive study, the agencies were unable to identify any means short of an exemption that would resolve all religious objections. And after further examination, the agencies found in the final rule that denying an exemption would not be narrowly tailored to achieving any compelling interest. See pp. 7-8, supra.

The court of appeals concluded that the accommodation does not impose a substantial burden on religion, reasoning that an employer's "submission of the self-certification form" to its insurer to invoke the accommodation "does not make the employer[] 'complicit' in the provision of contraceptive coverage.” App., infra, 39a (brackets and citation omitted). But this Court made clear in Hobby Lobby that a court may not reject a RFRA claim on the ground that “the connection between what the objecting parties must do” and “the end that they find to be morally wrong” is “too attenuated.” 573 U.S. at 723. As long as a claimant’s asserted belief “reflects ‘an honest conviction,’” “it is not for [courts] to say” that those “religious beliefs are mistaken.” Id. at 725 (citations omitted); see Sharpe, 801 F.3d at 941 (“As Hobby Lobby instructs, * * * we must accept [plaintiffs’] assertion that self-certification under the accommodation process * * * would violate their sincerely held religious beliefs.”); Priests for Life, 808 F.3d at 17 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc) (Hobby Lobby “emphasized that judges in RFRA cases may question only the sincerity of a plaintiff’s religious belief, not the correctness or reasonableness of that religious belief.”); cf. Thomas v. Review Bd. of the Ind. Emp’t Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 714 (1981).

The court of appeals thus had no warrant under RFRA to reject as incorrect a religious objector’s sincere belief that invoking the accommodation would make it complicit in providing contraceptive coverage. The court instead should have credited such sincere beliefs and focused on the amount of pressure the government places on such employers’ religious exercise. Hobby Lobby answers that question as well. The Court had “little trouble” concluding that the significant financial penalties imposed on employers that did not comply with the mandate imposed a substantial burden. 573 U.S. at 719. Employers that do not comply with the mandate or accommodation face the same penalties.

The court of appeals also stated that the religious exemption would “impose an undue burden on nonbeneficiaries—the female employees who will lose coverage for contraceptive care.” App., infra, 41a. But that likewise does not justify rejecting the religious exemption: a RFRA remedy is not invalid merely because it allows a religious objector to withhold a benefit from third parties. See Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 729 n.37 (“[I]t could not reasonably be maintained that any burden on religious exercise * * * is permissible under RFRA so long as the relevant legal obligation requires the religious adherent to confer a benefit on third parties”). And any loss of contraceptive coverage to women whose private employers invoke the religious exemption would result from decisions of those employers, not the government. The ACA does not confer any right to contraceptive coverage from a private employer. The obligation to provide such coverage was imposed by the agencies, and the agencies did not burden women merely by declining to require every private employer to provide contraceptive coverage, as they had already done in the exemption for churches and the accommodation’s effective exemption for self-insured church plans. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,549; cf. Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 337 n.15 (1987).

3. The court of appeals’ holding that the exemptions are likely statutorily unauthorized warrants review

The question whether the agencies acted within their statutory authority in adopting the exemptions warrants this Court’s review. The Court granted certiorari in Zubik and the consolidated cases to address challenges to the existing accommodation. Plenary review is even more appropriate now. Zubik left unresolved the disputes over the legality of the accommodation, remanding for the agencies and challengers to try to resolve their remaining differences. After soliciting public input and concluding that no measure short of an exemption would resolve all objections, the agencies adopted the final rules seeking to end the long-running uncertainty and litigation by establishing the religious and moral exemptions.

The court of appeals' decision thwarts those efforts and appears to leave the agencies no viable path forward. Under Hobby Lobby, the accommodation marks the floor: whether or not RFRA requires more, a question the Court expressly reserved, the agencies cannot afford religious objectors any less protection than the accommodation offers. But by concluding that the ACA does not authorize any exemptions from the mandate and that RFRA does not authorize going beyond the existing accommodation, the decision below sets the accommodation as the ceiling. It thereby freezes in place a measure that the agencies had already concluded would not resolve all objections. The decision below thus requires the agencies to maintain rules that they have concluded, and some courts have held, substantially burden sincere religious beliefs—and that do not address moral objections at all. That ruling implicates a compelling governmental interest in safeguarding rights of conscience. And the decision's reasoning casts doubt on the church exemption that has coexisted with the contraceptive-coverage mandate from the beginning and the accommodation's effective exemption for self-insured church plans.

B. The Final Rules Do Not Violate The APA

The court of appeals also erred in concluding that the States are likely to succeed on their claim that the final rules are procedurally invalid. App., infra, 23a-32a. Far from counseling against review, that alternative ground increases the need for this Court’s intervention.

1. The final rules, adopted after notice and comment, comply with the APA regardless of whether the interim rules were procedurally defective

The APA ordinarily requires agencies to publish a “notice of proposed rule making” and to “give interested persons an opportunity to participate” before promulgating regulations. 5 U.S.C. 553(b) and (c). An agency may forgo those steps, however, if Congress has expressly authorized it to do so, 5 U.S.C. 559, or if the agency has “good cause,” 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B). The agencies properly invoked both grounds for issuing the interim rules in 2017 without notice and comment. Congress has authorized each agency to issue “any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate to carry out [specified provisions].” 42 U.S.C. 300gg-92; see 26 U.S.C. 9833; 29 U.S.C. 1191c. And the agencies reasonably determined that the uncertainty created by conflicting lower-court decisions and ongoing litigation, as well as the need to protect objecting employers from potentially devastating penalties, made delaying the interim rules’ effective dates pending notice and comment “impracticable” and “contrary to the public interest.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,813; see Gov’t C.A. Br. 65-75.

The court of appeals disagreed, concluding that neither exception to the notice-and-comment requirement applies to the interim rules. App., infra, 23a-28a. But whether the agencies validly issued the interim rules without notice and comment is irrelevant here because the agencies issued the final rules—which superseded the interim rules—only after soliciting and considering public comments. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,552. The validity of the interim rules might matter at most with respect to the period before the final rules' effective date (January 14, 2019). Id. at 57,536. But in this suit seeking prospective relief, any putative deficiency in the process of adopting the interim rules is now academic.

The court of appeals nevertheless concluded that the final rules likely are procedurally invalid as well because they too closely track the interim rules. App., infra, 29a-32a. That conclusion is untenable. Even assuming arguendo that the interim rules were procedurally improper, nothing in the APA suggests that a regulation issued after notice and comment is invalid merely because it was preceded by a procedurally deficient interim rule.

Nor does the fact that the final rules' "substance" and "reason[ing]" resemble that of the interim rules, App., infra, 30a, in which the agencies solicited comment, render the final rules suspect. On the contrary, the APA requires a proposed rule to provide "fair notice" of the final rule's content, and a final rule that departs too far from the proposal may violate 5 U.S.C. 553. Long Island Care at Home, Ltd. v. Coke, 551 U.S. 158, 174 (2007) (noting that lower courts require final rule to be "a 'logical outgrowth' of the rule proposed" (citation omitted)). On the court of appeals' view, it is unclear whether, when, or how an agency whose interim rule is declared procedurally invalid could ever cure the defect through further rulemaking.

The court of appeals faulted the final rules for "not reflect[ing] any real open-mindedness toward the position set forth in the [interim rules]." App., infra, 30a. But as the court of appeals itself has previously recognized, "all that the [APA] requires" is that "the agency considered” comments, Nazareth Hosp. v. Secretary, HHS, 747 F.3d 172, 185 (3d Cir. 2014) (brackets and citation omitted)—not that it adopted a particular proportion of them. “While changes and revision are indicative of an open mind, an agency’s failure to make any does not mean its mind is closed.” Advocates for Highway & Auto Safety v. Federal Highway Admin., 28 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (citation omitted). The agencies did consider various changes to the interim rules raised by public comments, adopting some proposals and rejecting others. See, e.g., 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,557-57,558, 57,568-57,571, 57,616-57,619, 57,622-57,623. The court did not identify any comment or relevant factor the agencies failed to consider; it “express[ed] no opinion on whether the Agencies appropriately responded to comments collected.” App., infra, 30a. And the district court found that, “[f]or each example” the States cited of comments the agencies purportedly failed to address, the agencies in fact “acknowledged the comments and provided an explanation as to why the Agencies did (or did not)” adopt commenters’ views. Id. at 136a.

2. The court of appeals’ holding that the final rules are likely procedurally invalid warrants review

The court of appeals’ decision is in significant tension with the decisions of other courts of appeals, which have upheld final rules in similar circumstances regardless of the procedural validity of a preceding interim rule. See Levesque v. Block, 723 F.2d 175, 185, 188-189 (1st Cir. 1983) (voiding interim rule but concluding that final rule satisfied notice-and-comment requirements, where agency “present[ed] evidence of a level of public participation and a degree of agency receptivity that demonstrate that a real ‘public reconsideration of the issued rule’ has taken place”); Federal Express Corp. v. Mineta, 373 F.3d 112, 120 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (holding that final rule satisfied notice-and-comment requirements where agency provided “a meaningful opportunity to comment,” without addressing whether agency had good cause to issue interim final rule (citations omitted)); cf. Administrative Conference of the U.S., Recommendation 95-4, Procedures for Noncontroversial and Expedited Rulemaking, 60 Fed. Reg. 43,108, 43,110, 43,113 (Aug. 18, 1995) (“Where an agency has used post-promulgation comment procedures * * * courts are encouraged not to set aside such ratified or modified rule solely on the basis that inadequate good cause existed originally to dispense with prepromulgation notice and comment procedures.”).

Whether and in what circumstances a procedural defect in an interim rule invalidates an ensuing final rule is also important. A study by the Government Accountability Office (GAO) found that, between 2003 and 2010, federal agencies issued dozens of “major” interim rules, which were frequently followed by finalized rules. U.S. GAO, GAO-13-21, Federal Rulemaking: Agencies Could Take Additional Steps to Respond to Public Comments 24-26, 41-44 (2012). Moreover, the procedural validity of an interim rule may not be definitively resolved in litigation for months or years, as this case illustrates—potentially long after a final rule would be promulgated in the ordinary course. The court of appeals’ position would put agencies to a choice between deferring issuance of final rules—leaving allegedly defective interim rules in place—or risking a future judicial decision finding the interim rules invalid and the final rules tainted.

II. THE COURT OF APPEALS' HOLDING AFFIRMING A NATIONWIDE INJUNCTION IS INCORRECT AND WARRANTS THIS COURT'S REVIEW

A. This Court's review is independently warranted because the "nationwide" injunction the court of appeals affirmed, App., infra, 44a, transgresses fundamental Article III and equitable principles. Article III requires a "plaintiff's remedy [to] be 'limited to the inadequacy that produced his injury in fact.'" Gill v. Whitford, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1930 (2018) (quoting Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 357 (1996)) (brackets omitted). A plaintiff must "demonstrate standing * * * for each form of relief that is sought." Town of Chester v. Laroe Estates, Inc., 137 S. Ct. 1645, 1650 (2017) (citation omitted). And just as a plaintiff cannot pursue relief to benefit others if his own injury has already been redressed, see Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 494-497 (2009), a plaintiff cannot seek relief in the first instance beyond what is necessary to redress his own injury, see Whitford, 138 S. Ct. at 1929-1931 (plaintiffs challenging legislative-districting plan could not seek statewide relief because injury was district-specific).

Longstanding principles of equity likewise require that injunctive relief "be no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to the plaintiff[.]" Madsen v. Women's Health Ctr., Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 765 (1994) (citation omitted); see Lewis, 518 U.S. at 359-360. Moreover, federal courts' equitable authority is generally confined to relief "traditionally accorded by courts of equity" in 1789. Grupo Mexicano de Desarrollo, S.A. v. Alliance Bond Fund, Inc., 527 U.S. 308, 318 (1999). Absent-party injunctions generally, and so-called nationwide injunctions in particular, are a modern creation that did not exist at equity.

Samuel L. Bray, Multiple Chancellors: Reforming the National Injunction, 131 Harv. L. Rev. 417, 424-445 (2017). Such orders also “take a toll on the federal court system—preventing legal questions from percolating through the federal courts, encouraging forum shopping, and making every case a national emergency for the courts and for the Executive Branch.” Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. 2392, 2425 (2018) (Thomas, J., concurring). In addition, nationwide injunctions create an inequitable one-way ratchet: any prevailing plaintiff can obtain relief on behalf of all others, but a ruling for the government does not preclude other plaintiffs from seeking relief. Cf. United States v. Mendoza, 464 U.S. 154, 158-162 (1984).

B. The injunction the court of appeals affirmed cannot be reconciled with those principles. This suit was brought by two States, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. As the government explained below, the States have not demonstrated any cognizable injury-in-fact that is actual or imminent and fairly traceable to the final rules. Gov’t C.A. Br. 22-39. Their suit should be dismissed, and their request for a preliminary injunction denied, on that basis alone. But even if the States had demonstrated some Article III injury, enjoining the final rules throughout the country is not necessary or appropriate to redress it.

The court of appeals stated that “a nationwide injunction is necessary to provide the States complete relief” principally because some of their residents work out of state; if those residents’ employers are exempt, it reasoned, those residents will turn to state-funded services. App., infra, 44a-45a. But many New Jersey residents who work out of state do so in Pennsylvania, and vice versa. Gov’t C.A. Br. 82. And although some of those States’ residents may work in other adjoining States—New York, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, and West Virginia—all but one of those States (Ohio) requires health-insurance plans (aside from self-insured plans) to provide contraceptive coverage. Id. at 82-83. Those who work in other States may also be unaffected because their out-of-state employer is ineligible for the exemption or legally or effectively exempt from the mandate for other reasons. Id. at 83-84. The court’s conjecture about out-of-state employment (or study) does not establish that nationwide relief is necessary to redress any cognizable, irreparable injury to the plaintiff States.

At a minimum, nationwide relief is not appropriate because the balance of equities tips decisively in the government’s favor. Weighed against the government’s interest in implementation of its rules and in safeguarding religious liberty and moral conscience, the States’ speculative injuries predicated on residents who might be covered by out-of-state plans and who might resort to state-funded assistance if their plans invoke the exemptions cannot equitably justify enjoining the exemptions everywhere.

C. This Court’s review of the court of appeals’ decision affirming nationwide relief is warranted because that decision extends a concerning trend among lower courts of issuing categorical, absent-party injunctions that bar any enforcement of federal laws or policies against any person. The decision below is also in tension with the Ninth Circuit’s holding that a different district court abused its discretion by imposing nationwide injunctive relief against the interim rules in a parallel suit by other States. See California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 582-584 (2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct.

2716 (2019). After cataloguing the “detrimental consequences” of nationwide injunctions, the Ninth Circuit concluded that relief limited to the plaintiff States there “would provide complete relief to them,” including the “economic harm” those States asserted. Id. at 583-584. The district court here expressly rejected “the Ninth Circuit’s approach.” App., infra, 180a. In affirming that decision, the court of appeals sought to distinguish this case on the ground that “the record” here was more extensive. Id. at 44a n.32. But the scope of the record in this case is irrelevant because the court of appeals cited nothing in that record that justifies categorical relief.

Argued: May 21, 2019

Filed: July 12, 2019*

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania
(E.D. Pa. No. 2:17-cv-04540)
District Judge: Hon. Wendy Beetlestone

OPINION OF THE COURT

Before: MCKEE, SHWARTZ, and FUENTES, Circuit Judges.

SHWARTZ, Circuit Judge.

The Women’s Health Amendment to the Affordable Care Act (“ACA”) mandated that women’s health insurance include coverage for preventive health care. Through the Amendment, Congress directed the Health Resources and Services Administration (“HRSA”), a component of the Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”), to issue guidelines setting forth the preventive health care services that women should be provided. Among the services HRSA identified was contraceptive care. Nowhere in the enabling statute did Congress grant the agency the authority to exempt entities from providing insurance coverage for such services nor did Congress allow federal agencies to issue regulations concerning this coverage without complying with the Administrative Procedure Act.

* As amended by order of July 18, 2019.

Notwithstanding Congress’s directives, in 2017, HHS and the Departments of Labor and Treasury (collectively, “the Agencies”) promulgated regulations that expanded the entities that could invoke an exemption to the requirement that group health insurance plans cover contraceptive services as a form of women’s preventive health care. Because the state plaintiffs are likely to succeed in proving that the Agencies did not follow the APA and that the regulations are not authorized under the ACA or required by the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (“RFRA”), we will affirm the District Court’s order preliminarily enjoining the rules’ enforcement nationwide.

Enacted as a part of the ACA, Pub. L. No. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119 (2010), the Women’s Health Amendment mandates that “[a] group health plan¹ and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements for . . . preventive care and screenings [for women] . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the [HRSA].”² 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a),

² Congress expressly exempted two sets of actors from various ACA requirements, including the Women’s Health Amendment: grandfathered health plans, 42 U.S.C. § 18011, and employers with fewer than 50 employees, 26 U.S.C. § 4980H(c)(2).

(a)(4). HRSA commissioned an expert panel from the Institute of Medicine to recommend covered services. In 2011, HRSA adopted the Institute’s recommendations and issued guidelines defining preventive care to include all “Food and Drug Administration approved contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling for all women with reproductive capacity,” “as prescribed” by a woman’s health care provider. HRSA, Women’s Preventive Services Guidelines, <https://www.hrsa.gov/womens-guidelines/index.html> (last visited May 8, 2019). This statutory and regulatory scheme was deemed the “Contraceptive Mandate.” Several regulations and litigation followed.

The same day that the Guidelines were issued, the Agencies promulgated an interim final rule (“IFR”), followed by a final rule in 2013, to exempt certain religious employers—namely, churches and similar entities—from the Contraceptive Mandate. Group Health Plans and Health Insurance Issuers Relating to Coverage of Preventive Services Under the Patient Protection Affordable Care Act, 77 Fed. Reg. 8,725 (Feb. 15, 2012) (the “Church Exemption”); Group Health Plans and Health Insurance Issuers Relating to Coverage of Preventive Services Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, 76 Fed. Reg. 46,621 (Aug. 3, 2011).³

³ After a notice-and-comment rulemaking process, which included consideration of comments concerning whether coverage may conflict with the religious beliefs of some employers, Group Health Plans and Health Insurance Issuers Relating to Coverage of Preventive Services Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, 76 Fed. Reg. 46,621, 46,623 (August 3, 2011), the Agencies defined “religious employer[s]” in the Church Exemption as entities

As the Agencies later explained, the “exemption for churches and houses of worship is consistent with their special status under longstanding tradition in our society and under federal law.” Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 80 Fed. Reg. 41,318, 41,325 (July 14, 2015).

The 2013 final rule also separately provided that a nonprofit religious employer who “(1) [o]pposes providing coverage for some or all of the contraceptive services required to be covered . . . on account of religious objections; (2) is organized and operates as a nonprofit entity; (3) holds itself out as a religious organization; and (4) self-certifies that it satisfies the first three criteria,” 78 Fed. Reg. at 39,874, is entitled to an accommodation to avoid “contracting, arranging, paying, or referring for contraceptive coverage,” id. at 39,875. This accommodation process (the “Accommodation”) permits an employer to send a self-certification form to its insurance issuer, which then excludes contraceptive coverage, either in full or in part, from the group health plan and in turn “provide[s] payments for contraceptive services for plan participants and beneficiaries, separate from the group health plan, without the imposition of cost sharing, premium, fee, or other charge on plan participants or beneficiaries or on the eligible organization or its plan.” Id. at 39,876. A third party administrator (“TPA”) may also be used as a claims or plan administrator “solely for the purpose of providing payments for contraceptive services for participants and beneficiaries in a self-insured plan of an eligible organization at no cost to plan participants or beneficiaries or to the eligible organization.” Id. at 39,879. By invoking the Accommodation, the employer was no longer responsible for providing coverage for contraceptive care.

“that [are] organized and operate[] as . . . nonprofit entit[ies] and [are] referred to” as such in the internal revenue code provision applying to “churches, their integrated auxiliaries, and conventions or associations of churches, as well as to the exclusively religious activities of any religious order,” Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 78 Fed. Reg. 39,870, 39,871, 39,889 (July 2, 2013); see 45 C.F.R. § 147.132.

Various legal challenges followed. First, in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682 (2014), the Supreme Court held that the Accommodation must be extended to closely-held for-profit corporations with sincere religious objections to the provision of contraceptive coverage so that their religious beliefs were not substantially burdened under RFRA, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1. Id. at 724-26. The Court observed that use of the Accommodation process was a less restrictive means to ensure access to cost-free contraceptives. Id. at 730-31. Days later, in Wheaton College v. Burwell, 573 U.S. 958 (2014), the Court concluded that Wheaton College, who also lodged a religious objection to providing insurance for services covered by the Contraceptive Mandate, did not have to use the Accommodation self-certification form, known as the ESBA Form 700, but could instead rely on its notification to HHS to satisfy the Accommodation’s prerequisites. Id. at 959.

To ensure compliance with these rulings, the Agencies promulgated another IFR and final rule.⁴ Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 80 Fed. Reg. 41,318 (July 14, 2015). The rule “extend[ed] the [A]ccommodation to a for-profit entity that is not publicly traded, is majority-owned by a relatively small number of individuals, and objects to providing contraceptive coverage based on its owners’ religious beliefs.” Id. at 41,324. The rule also “allow[ed] eligible organizations to choose between using [the] ESBA Form 700 or the alternative process [of notifying HHS in writing of a religious objection to covering contraceptive services] consistent with the Wheaton interim order.” Id. at 41,323.

⁴ The final rule implementing Hobby Lobby was preceded by notice of proposed rulemaking. Coverage of Certain Preventive

In Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (per curiam), the Supreme Court addressed the petitioners’ assertions that “submitting [the Accommodation] notice substantially burden[ed] the exercise of their religion, in violation of [RFRA].” Id. at 1559. The Court did not reach the merits of this claim but rather remanded to afford the parties “an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward that accommodates petitioners’ religious exercise while at the same time ensuring that women covered by petitioners’ health plans receive full . . . contraceptive coverage.” Id. at 1560 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

In response to the Court’s direction in Zubik, the Agencies solicited comments regarding the current procedure and possible alternatives to the Accommodation. Coverage for Contraceptive Services, 81 Fed. Reg. 47,741 (July 22, 2016). The Agencies reviewed the comments and found that “no feasible approach has been identified at this time that would resolve the concerns of religious objectors while still ensuring that the affected women receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.” Dep’t of Labor, FAQs About Affordable Care Act Implementation Part 36, at 4 (Jan. 9, 2017), available at <https://www.dol.gov/sites/default/files/ebsa/about-ebsa/our-activities/resource-center/faqs/aca-part-36.pdf>. As a result, the Accommodation remained unchanged.

In May 2017, President Donald Trump issued an executive order directing the Agencies to “consider issuing amended regulations, consistent with applicable law, to address conscience-based objections to the preventive-care mandate promulgated under [42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4)].” Exec. Order No. 13,798 § 3, 82 Fed. Reg. 21,675 (May 9, 2017). In response, and without issuing a notice of proposed rulemaking or soliciting public comment, the Agencies issued two new IFRs: the Religious IFR and the Moral IFR. These IFRs expanded the existing exemption and Accommodation framework, made the Accommodation process voluntary, and offered similar protections to organizations with moral objections to contraceptives. See Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 82 Fed. Reg. 47,792 (Oct. 13, 2017); Moral Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 82 Fed. Reg. 47,838 (Oct. 13, 2017). This litigation followed.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania filed suit against various governmental entities⁵ and sought to enjoin the enforcement of the IFRs. Little Sisters of the Poor Saints Peter and Paul Home (“Little Sisters”) intervened.⁶ The District Court granted Pennsylvania’s

⁶ Little Sisters, a religious nonprofit operating a home in Pittsburgh, moved to intervene, the District Court denied its motion, and our Court reversed, concluding, at that time, intervention was appropriate because the litigation posed a threat to Little Sisters’ interest in an exemption, and that its interests are not adequately represented by the Government. See generally Pennsylvania v. President of the United States of Am., 888 F.3d 52 (3d Cir. 2018). Since then, however, the United States District Court for the District of Colorado permanently enjoined enforcement of the Contraceptive Mandate for benefit plans in which Little Sisters participates. Pennsylvania v. Trump, 351 F. Supp. 3d 791, 829 n.27 (E.D. Pa. 2019) (“Defendant-Intervenor has secured a permanent injunction, preventing enforcement of the Contraceptive Mandate against it.”); Little Sisters of the Poor v. Azar, No. 1:13-cv-02611, Dkt. No. 82 at 2-3 (D. Colo. May 29, 2018); Accordingly, Little Sisters is no longer aggrieved by the District Court’s ruling, its need for relief is moot, and thus they lack appellate standing. See Ass’n of Banks in Ins. v. Duryee, 270 F.3d 397, 403 (6th Cir. 2001) (“[T]he intervenor-defendants face the threat of economic injury should the Ohio statutory provisions not be enforced. Such threatened injury is sufficient to confer appellate standing on the intervenor-defendants and allows them to challenge the merits of the district court’s decision.”); cf. In re Grand Jury, 111 F.3d 1066, 1071 (3d Cir. 1997) (“Since both intervenors remain aggrieved after the district court’s disposition, the constitutional requirements for standing to appeal as well as standing to sue are satisfied.”).

request to preliminarily enjoin the IFRs. See generally Pennsylvania v. Trump, 281 F. Supp. 3d 553 (E.D. Pa. 2017). The Court held that Pennsylvania was likely to succeed on its procedural and substantive challenges under the APA. Id. at 576, 581. The Government appealed, and the District Court granted a stay pending appeal.

While the appeal of the order preliminarily enjoining the IFRs was pending, the Agencies promulgated two Final Rules, which are virtually identical to the Religious and Moral IFRs. See Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,536 (Nov. 15, 2018); 45 C.F.R. § 147.132 (“Religious Rule” or “Religious Exemption”); Moral Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,592 (Nov. 15, 2018); 45 C.F.R. § 147.133 (“Moral Rule” or “Moral Exemption”) (collectively, “the Rules” or “the Exemptions”). Like the Religious IFR, the Final Rule creating the Religious Exemption expanded the categories of employers who are permitted to invoke the exemption from the Contraceptive Mandate to include all nonprofit, for-profit, and publicly-held companies. The Religious Exemption also made participation in the Accommodation process completely voluntarily, relieving employers from the need to “file notices or certifications of their exemption.”⁷ 83 Fed. Reg. at

⁷ The Agencies assert that under ERISA, employees will at least receive notice that their plans no longer cover certain contraceptives because, “with respect to plans subject to ERISA, a plan document must include a comprehensive summary of the benefits covered by the plan,” which will “serve to help provide notice to participants and

57,558; see also id. at 57,537, 57,562. The Final Rule creating the Moral Exemption offered the same exemption and voluntary accommodation process to nonprofit organizations and non-publicly traded organizations “with sincerely held moral convictions opposed to coverage of some or all contraceptive or sterilization methods.” Id. at 57,593.

At Pennsylvania’s request, the District Court lifted the stay, and Pennsylvania filed an amended complaint, joined New Jersey as a plaintiff,⁸ added challenges to the Final Rules and moved to enjoin them.⁹

The District Court held hearings and received evidence regarding the Rules. Specifically, the States submitted evidence from health care professionals and state insurance regulators about the Rules’ impact. The evidence addressed the relationship between costs and contraceptive use and the impact the Rules would have on state-funded healthcare services.

Cost is a significant barrier to contraceptive use and access. The most effective forms of contraceptives are the most expensive. After the ACA removed cost bar-beneficiaries” of what services are covered. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,558. Even if this is true, this would apply only to certain employers.

⁸ Pennsylvania and New Jersey are referred to herein collectively as the “the States.”

riers, women switched to the more effective and expensive methods of contraception.¹⁰ Because the Rules allow employers to opt out of providing coverage for contraceptive services, some women may no longer have insurance to help offset the cost for these and other contraceptives.

Pennsylvania and New Jersey have state-funded programs that provide family planning and contraceptive services for eligible individuals. For example, Pennsylvania Medicaid and New Jersey's FamilyCare¹¹ cover all health care for childless adults, pregnant women, and parents with incomes up to 138% and up to 215% of the federal poverty level, respectively. Pennsylvania's Family Planning Services Program also covers all family planning-related services, including contraceptives, for individuals with incomes up to 215% of the federal poverty level even if they have private insurance, and New Jersey's Plan First program offers the same for individuals with incomes up to 205% of the federal poverty level.

Women who lack contraceptive coverage and who meet certain income levels may also turn to Title X family planning clinics which "provide access to contraceptive services, supplies, and information to all who want and need them" with priority to low-income persons.

¹¹ NJ FamilyCare is New Jersey's state and federally-funded Medicaid.

Office of Population Affairs, Funding History, HHS, <https://www.hhs.gov/opa/title-x-family-planning/about-title-x-grants/funding-history/index.html> (last visited May 12, 2019). State and federal governments fund Title X clinics, but recently, federal funding has decreased.

The States expect that when women lose contraceptive insurance coverage from their employers, they will seek out these state-funded programs and services. The States further assert that women who do not seek or qualify for state-funded contraceptives may have unintended pregnancies. Public funds are used to cover the costs of many unintended pregnancies.¹² Accordingly, the States expect to spend more money due to the Rules.

In addition to this evidence, the Agencies presented spread sheets that listed the organizations and companies that were previously involved in ACA Contraceptive Mandate litigation. The Agencies offered this evidence to demonstrate the likely universe of employers whom they contend may seek to invoke the Rules and opt out of covering contraceptive care.

The day the Final Rules were set to go into effect, January 14, 2019, the District Court issued a nationwide injunction enjoining their enforcement. Pennsylvania v. Trump, 351 F. Supp. 3d 791 (E.D. Pa. 2019). The Court found that the States had standing to challenge the Final Rules and established a likelihood of success on the merits of their APA claims. First, the Court held that the States are likely to succeed on their procedural APA claims because the Agencies failed to comply with the notice-and-comment requirement and this defect tainted the Final Rules. Id. at 813. Second, the Court held that the States were likely to succeed on their substantive APA challenges because neither the ACA nor RFRA authorized the Agencies to create exemptions. Specifically, the unambiguous language of the ACA’s Women’s Health Amendment only authorized the Agencies to decide what services would be covered, not who provides them, id. at 821, and RFRA did not require or authorize such broad exemptions, particularly given RFRA’s remedial function that places the responsibility for adjudicating religious burdens on the courts, not the Agencies, id. at 822-23. The Court concluded that the balance of equities and public interest favored an injunction, id. at 829-30, and that a nationwide injunction was appropriate to ensure complete relief for the States, id. at 834-35. The Government appeals.

II¹³

We first address whether the States have standing.¹⁴ Article III limits the scope of federal judicial review to “cases” or “controversies.” U.S. Const. art. III § 2. A fundamental safeguard of this limitation is the doctrine of standing. Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547 (2016). Put simply, only parties with standing

¹³ The District Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1).

“can invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts.” Constitution Party of Pa. v. Aichele, 757 F.3d 347, 357 (3d Cir. 2014). To have standing to sue, “[t]he plaintiff must have (1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision.” Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547 (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 (1992)). We will examine each element in turn.

A

To establish injury in fact, the alleged injury must be “concrete and particularized” and “actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.” Id. at 1548 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560). An injury is concrete if it “actually exist[s]” and is not abstract. Id. “For an injury to be particularized, it must affect the plaintiff in a personal and individualized way.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Plaintiffs need not “demonstrate that it is literally certain that the harms they identify will come about.” Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 414 n.5 (2013). Instead, “[a]n allegation of future injury may suffice if . . . there is a substantial risk that the harm will occur.” Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 158 (2014) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Clapper, 568 U.S. at 410 (rejecting lower court’s use of an “objectively reasonable likelihood” standard to assess injury).

The States have established that they will suffer a concrete and particularized injury. The States describe that (1) employers will take advantage of the exemptions and women covered by their plans will lose contraceptive coverage; and (2) financially-eligible women will turn to state-funded services for their contraceptive needs and for the unintended pregnancies that may result from the loss of coverage. As a result, the States will suffer a concrete financial injury from the increased use of state-funded services. See Cottrell v. Alcon Labs., 874 F.3d 154, 163 (3d Cir. 2017) (“Typically, a plaintiff’s allegations of financial harm will easily satisfy each of these components, as financial harm is a classic and paradigmatic form[] of injury in fact.” (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)). The States will suffer this injury in a particularized manner, as each State’s coffers will be depleted by the expenditure of funds to meet the increased demand for state services. Having concluded that the States have identified a concrete and particular injury, we next examine whether the injury at issue is not conjectural and is actual or imminent.

The record shows that the injury the States expect to sustain is not conjectural. First, the Agencies’ regulatory impact analysis acknowledges that between 70,500 and 126,400 women nationwide will lose contraceptive coverage as a result of their employers’ invocation of the Religious Exemption, 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,578, 57,581, and fifteen women will lose coverage as a result of their employers’ use of the Moral Exemption, 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,627. See California v. Azar (“California II”), 911 F.3d 558, 572 (9th Cir. 2018) (noting that the Agencies’ own regulatory impact analysis estimates loss of coverage, and therefore “it is reasonably probable that women in the plaintiff states will lose some or all employer-sponsored contraceptive coverage due to the IFRs”), cert. denied Little Sisters of the Poor v. California, No. 18-1192, — S. Ct. —, 2019 WL 1207008 (June 17, 2019) (Mem.). Second, based on the Agencies’ list of entities who challenged the Contraceptive Mandate, eight employers, not including Little Sisters, between New Jersey and Pennsylvania would likely take advantage of the Exemptions. Massachusetts v. U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 923 F.3d 209, 224 (1st Cir. 2019) (relying on spreadsheet of litigating entities to find “it is highly likely that at least three employers in the Commonwealth with self-insured health plans . . . will use the expanded exemptions”). Accordingly, it is not conjecture to conclude that employers in Pennsylvania and New Jersey will take advantage of the Exemptions and, as a result, women will lose coverage. Id. at 224 n.12 (stating that “it is improbable based on the evidence that no women in the [States] would lose contraceptive coverage” (emphasis omitted)).

The record also supports the District Court’s conclusion that the injury is imminent. The States have provided evidence showing that the Exemption will result in the expenditure of state funds because some women who lose coverage will inevitably seek out state-sponsored programs providing contraceptive services; and some women will forego contraceptive use, causing the States to shoulder the costs of unintended pregnancies.

With the ACA, many patients “switch[ed] from a cheaper, less effective [contraceptive] method to a more effective, expensive method that was better for their medical health and personal needs.” App. 272. Contraceptives are not only used for pregnancy prevention. They are the “standard first-line of care for a number of hormonal, and other, disorders, including poly-cystic ovarian syndrome, primary ovarian insufficiency/premature ovarian failure, amenorrhea, dysmenorrhea/chronic pelvic pain, and abnormal uterine bleeding.” App. 292. A “vast majority” of women use inter-uterine devices (“IUDs”)—a treatment religious objectors are particularly focused on, App. 350-83—“for purposes other than birth control.” App. 293 (describing 90-95% of patients using IUDs for non-birth control purposes). Contraceptive use “carries long-term health benefits for women[,]” including reducing the risk of ovarian and uterine cancer. App. 294. “Contraception also helps protect the health of those women for whom pregnancy can be hazardous, or even life-threatening.” Amici Curiae Health Prof’l Orgs. Br. at 16. Thus, removing cost free contraceptive coverage can have ramifications on women’s health beyond birth control and unplanned pregnancies.

Without insurance to defray or eliminate the cost for the more-effective contraceptive methods, women will use “less expensive and less effective methods,” App. 245, and both Pennsylvania and New Jersey “anticipate[] that women who lose contraceptive coverage through employer plans—whether the plan of their own employer or that of another family member—may seek contraception from other sources, including state-funded programs.”¹⁵ App. 299; App. 317. Thus, the ¹⁵ The Agencies “theorize” that some women may be able to pay out of pocket or obtain coverage through a spouse or family member’s plan. Massachusetts, 923 F.3d at 227. While “[s]uch a hypothetical woman may exist, . . . the number of women with incomes that make them eligible for state-assisted contraceptive coverage but who still fit in that category would, logically, be very small.” Id.

State-funded programs will be tapped to provide coverage for financially eligible women whose employers invoke the Exemptions.

Furthermore, some women who lose contraceptive coverage may either fail to qualify for state services or elect to forego the use of contraceptives altogether. “Women who stop using contraception are more likely to have unplanned pregnancies and to require additional medical attention.” App. 312. The costs of such unintended pregnancies are often shouldered by states, costing hundreds of millions of dollars. Therefore, the evidence supports the conclusion that the loss of contraceptive coverage may also result in unintended pregnancies for which the States will bear associated health care costs.

For these reasons, “[t]he expanded exemptions are expected to result in greater financial expenditures” by the States on contraceptive services. App. 318. This anticipated substantial impact on state finances presents an imminent injury. Thus, the District Court properly found that the States showed an imminent injury in fact.

The Government faults the States for failing to identify a specific woman who will be affected by the Final Rules, but the States need not define injury with such a demanding level of particularity to establish standing. Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 523 n.21 (2007); see Massachusetts, 923 F.3d at 225; California II, 911 F.3d at 572. The likelihood that employers will invoke the Exemptions and leave women without contraceptive coverage, and that women will turn to the States for coverage, is sufficient to demonstrate imminent injury.

This likelihood “has nothing to do with whether petitioners have determined [a] precise” woman who will seek such funding. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 523 n.21.¹⁶

The States’ imminent injury is causally connected and fairly traceable to the Exemptions. The States will suffer financial injury when employers in Pennsylvania and New Jersey take advantage of the Exemptions, leaving female employees without contraceptive coverage and prompting financially eligible women to turn to state-funded services. See Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 159 (5th Cir. 2015) (“For Texas to incur injury, DAPA beneficiaries would have to apply for driver’s licenses as a consequence of DHS’s action, and it is apparent that many would do so.”), aff’d by an equally divided court, United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (Mem.) (per curiam). In other words, the

the likelihood that Massachusetts’ coastline will recede has nothing to do with whether petitioners have determined the precise metes and bounds of their soon-to-be-flooded land. Petitioners maintain that the seas are rising and will continue to rise, and have alleged that such a rise will lead to the loss of Massachusetts’ sovereign territory. . . . Our cases require nothing more.

Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 523 n.21. Just as it was unnecessary for Massachusetts to identify specific coastline that would be flooded by the agencies’ inaction, it is unnecessary for the States to identify a specific woman who would be impacted by the Government’s action where in both instances, the record provided a basis to infer specific imminent injury.

States will not experience an increased demand for services and the resulting financial burden unless the new Exemptions, which create a void in contraceptive coverage, go into effect. See id. at 160 (“Far from playing an insignificant role, DAPA would be the primary cause and likely the only one. Without the program, there would be little risk of a dramatic increase in the costs of the driver’s-license program.”). Thus, there is a link between the Exemptions and the impact on the States’ fisci.

C

The District Court also correctly concluded that an injunction would redress the financial injury the States face from the Rules. Enjoining the Final Rules until their legality is adjudicated on the merits will avoid the imminent financial burden the States face if they are not enjoined. Massachusetts, 923 F.3d at 228 (“[A]n injunction preventing the application of these exemptions would stop the alleged fiscal injury from occurring, making it not only ‘likely,’ Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1547, but certain that this injury would not occur for as long as the exemptions are enjoined.”); see Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 526 (“The risk of catastrophic harm, though remote, is nevertheless real. That risk would be reduced to some extent if petitioners received the relief they seek.”).

For these reasons, the States have standing to bring this suit.¹⁷

¹⁷ Based upon of the foregoing discussion, we need not decide whether the States also have standing under the special solicitude or parens patriae doctrines.

III

Having determined that the States have standing, we now address whether they are entitled to a preliminary injunction. The decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction is within the sound discretion of the district court.¹⁸ Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 33 (2008). To obtain a preliminary injunction, the movants must:

demonstrate (1) that they are reasonably likely to prevail eventually in the litigation and (2) that they are likely to suffer irreparable injury without relief. If these two threshold showings are made the District Court then considers, to the extent relevant, (3) whether an injunction would harm the [defendants] more than denying relief would harm the plaintiffs and (4) whether granting relief would serve the public interest.

K.A. ex rel. Ayers v. Pocono Mountain Sch. Dist., 710 F.3d 99, 105 (3d Cir. 2013) (alteration in original) (quoting Tenaflly Eruv Ass’n v. Borough of Tenaflly, 309 F.3d 144, 157 (3d Cir. 2002)); accord Fed. R. Civ. P. 65. To establish a likelihood of success, “a sufficient degree of success for a strong showing exists if there is ‘a reasonable chance, or probability, of winning.’” In re Revel AC, Inc., 802 F.3d 558, 568 (3d Cir. 2015)

¹⁸ “We employ a tripartite standard of review for . . . preliminary injunctions. We review the District Court’s findings of fact for clear error. Legal conclusions are assessed de novo. The ultimate decision to grant or deny the injunction is reviewed for abuse of discretion.” K.A. ex rel. Ayers v. Pocono Mountain Sch. Dist., 710 F.3d 99, 105 (3d Cir. 2013) (omission in original) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

(quoting Singer Mgmt. Consultants, Inc. v. Milgram, 650 F.3d 223, 229 (3d Cir. 2011) (en banc)).

Here, we must decide whether the District Court correctly concluded that the States have a reasonable probability of showing that the Final Rules violate the APA, and if so, whether the equitable factors warrant a nationwide injunction.

A¹⁹

To promulgate binding regulations, agencies engage in what is known as notice-and-comment rulemaking. 5 U.S.C. § 553. This requires an agency to publish notice of the proposed rule in the Federal Register, collect and consider public comments, and issue a concise statement of purpose upon finalizing the new rule. Id. § 553(b)-(c). Deviation from these procedures is only permitted where expressly authorized by statute, id. § 559, or when the agency has “good cause” to dispense with them, id. § 553(b)(3)(B). The Agencies assert that both grounds justify their decision to forego notice-and-comment procedures here. They are mistaken.

The Government first argues that provisions within the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (“HIPAA”) grant the Agencies discretion to proceed by IFR in lieu of notice-and-comment rulemaking.

¹⁹ Quite appropriately, the Agencies do not challenge the States’ statutory standing to sue under the APA. 5 U.S.C. § 702; Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520 (recognizing states’ “procedural right to challenge the rejection of its rulemaking petition as arbitrary and capricious” under the EPA).

The provisions upon which the Government relies provide:

The Secretary, consistent with section 104 of [HIPAA], may promulgate such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this [subchapter]. The Secretary may promulgate any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate to carry out this [subchapter].

26 U.S.C. § 9833; 29 U.S.C. § 1191c; 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-92 [hereinafter “Regulation Provision”]. This language does not eliminate the need for notice and comment.

First, the APA only allows a subsequent statute to modify or supersede its procedural requirements “to the extent [the statute] does so expressly.” 5 U.S.C. § 559. The Regulation Provision contains no express language supplanting APA procedures, and the sole reference to “interim final rules” does not confer a license to ignore APA requirements. Indeed, in contrast to statutory authorizations to forego APA procedures, the Regulation Provision is “permissive (‘The Secretary may promulgate any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate . . . ’), wide-ranging (applying to any regulatory proceeding relating to group health insurance plans), and do[es] not contain any specific deadlines for agency action.” Coal. for Parity, Inc. v. Sebelius, 709 F. Supp. 2d 10, 18-19 (D.D.C. 2010) (omissions in original and emphasis omitted); see also California II, 911 F.3d at 578-80. In short, because the Regulation Provision “neither contain[s] express language exempting agencies from the APA nor provide[s] alternative procedures that could reasonably be understood as departing from the APA,” it does not authorize the Agencies to disregard the notice-and-comment requirements. California II, 911 F.3d at 579.

Second, the statutory reference within the Regulation Provision sheds light on the scope and purpose of its IFR sentence. As the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit points out, § 104 of HIPAA aims to assure regulatory coordination between the Agencies’ Secretaries for matters over which they share responsibility. See California II, 911 F.3d at 579-80 (citing Pub. L. No. 104-191, 110 Stat. 1936 (1996) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-92)). The first sentence of the Regulation Provision authorizes each Secretary to promulgate regulations “consistent with” the HIPAA section on coordination. The second sentence is identical but for two differences: it discusses IFRs instead of final regulations, and it omits any mention of HIPAA’s coordination section. Read in light of the first sentence, the second ensures that each Agency can proceed by IFR where a Secretary “need[s] to regulate within his or her own domain temporarily while sorting out . . . inter-agency conflict.” Id. at 579. Thus, “we need not give the second sentence the [A]gencies’ expansive interpretation in order for the second sentence to retain independent effect.” Id. at 579-80. In sum, the Regulation Provision does not expressly excuse the Agencies from complying with APA procedures and therefore does not provide a basis for issuing the IFRs without notice and comment.²⁰

²⁰ Congress knows how to excuse an agency from complying with the APA. For example, one HIPAA provision expressly permits the Agencies to promulgate a rule prior to notice and comment. 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b note. That provision requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to publish a rule prescribing penalties for kickbacks by January 1, 1997, then less than four months

The Agencies also lacked good cause for dispensing with notice of and comment to the IFRs. An agency has “good cause” to forego APA procedures where following them would be “impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.”²¹ 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(3)(B). “[C]ircumstances justifying reliance on [the good cause] exception are indeed rare and will be accepted only after the court has examine[d] closely proffered rationales justifying the elimination of public procedures.” Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc. v. EPA (“NRDC”), 683 F.2d 752, 764 (3d Cir. 1982) (alterations in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Thus, we construe the “good cause” exception to the notice-and-comment requirement narrowly.²² Id.

away. It provides that “[s]uch rule shall be effective and final immediately on an interim basis, but is subject to change and revision after public notice and opportunity for . . . public comment.” Unlike the Regulation Provision, § 1320a-7b expressly provides for notice and comment after the promulgation of an IFR. Congress’s omission of that procedure from the Regulation Provision demonstrates that it did not provide the Agencies authority to promulgate IFRs without notice and comment.

²¹ 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(3) provides

[e]xcept when notice or hearing is required by statute, this subsection does not apply—

(B) when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.

When they issued the IFRs, the Agencies claimed good cause to waive notice and comment based on (1) the urgent need to alleviate harm to those with religious objections to the current regulations; (2) the need to address “continued uncertainty, inconsistency, and cost” arising from “litigation challenging the previous rules”; and (3) the fact that the Agencies had already collected comments on prior Mandate-related regulations. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,813-15; see also 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,855-59. None of these assertions meet the standard for good cause.

First, the Agencies’ desire to address the purported harm to religious objections does not ameliorate the need to follow appropriate procedures. All regulations are directed toward reducing harm in some manner.²³ See United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498, 512-13 (3d Cir. 2013). Thus, “[a] need to regulate affected parties does not create the urgency necessary to establish good cause.” Id. at 511. “As with any other administrative agency conclusion, we require some statement of facts or circumstances that justifies the existence of standards—reviewing the agency’s good cause determination to see if it is arbitrary and capricious—the IFRs cannot stand.

²³ As we observed in Reynolds,

[m]ost, if not all, laws passed by Congress requiring agencies to promulgate new rules are designed to eliminate some real or perceived harm. If the mere assertion that such harm will continue while an agency gives notice and receives comments were enough to establish good cause, then notice and comment would always have to give way. An agency will invariably be able to point to some continuing harm during the notice and comment period antecedent to the promulgation of a rule.

710 F.3d at 512-13.

good cause (e.g., an imminent, externally imposed deadline or the existence of an emergency).” Id. at 512. The Agencies fail to cite any facts or impending deadlines sufficient to raise “good cause” here.

Second, the need to address uncertainty is likewise insufficient to establish good cause. Uncertainty precedes every regulation, and to allow uncertainty to excuse compliance with notice-and-comment procedures “would have the effect of writing [those] requirements out of the statute.” Id. at 510. Furthermore, our precedent forecloses the acceptance of uncertainty as a basis for good cause. Id. (“An agency’s intention to provide clarity, without more, cannot amount to good cause.”).

Third, the Agencies’ previous solicitation and collection of comments regarding other rules concerning the Contraceptive Mandate cannot substitute for notice and comment here. If the APA permitted agencies to forego notice-and-comment concerning a proposed regulation simply because they already regulated similar matters, then the good cause exception could largely obviate the notice-and-comment requirement. Furthermore, the IFRs did not make a minor change. The IFRs create exemptions from the Contraceptive Mandate with unprecedented scope and make the Accommodation wholly voluntary. Such a dramatic overhaul of the Contraceptive Mandate regulations required notice-and-comment under the APA.

For these reasons, the Agencies did not have good cause to ignore the APA’s notice and comment requirement.

B

The Government also contends that, even if the IFRs were procedurally deficient, the Agencies' subsequent use of notice-and-comment rulemaking to finalize the Rules cured any procedural defects. Under our precedent, however, "post-promulgation notice and comment procedures cannot cure the failure to provide such procedures prior to the promulgation of the rule at issue." NRDC, 683 F.2d at 768; see Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 519 ("Any suggestion that the postpromulgation comments to the Interim Rule can satisfy [the purposes of notice-and-comment rulemaking] misses the point." (internal citation omitted)); Sharon Steel Corp. v. EPA, 597 F.2d 377, 381 (3d Cir. 1979) ("We hold that the period for comments after promulgation cannot substitute for the prior notice and comment required by the APA.").

APA notice-and-comment procedures serve several goals, including "(1) to ensure that agency regulations are tested via exposure to diverse public comment, (2) to ensure fairness to affected parties, and (3) to give affected parties an opportunity to develop evidence in the record to support their objections to the rule and thereby enhance the quality of judicial review." Prometheus Radio Project v. FCC, 652 F.3d 431, 449 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting Int'l Union, United Mine Workers of Am. v. Mine Safety & Health Admin., 407 F.3d 1250, 1259 (D.C. Cir. 2005)). The comment process also allows each agency to "maintain[] a flexible and open-minded attitude towards its own rules," Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 511 (alteration in original and citation omitted) (quoting Prometheus Radio, 652 F.3d at 449); see also Azar v. Allina Health Servs., 139 S. Ct. 1804, 1816 (2019) ("Notice and comment . . . affords the agency a chance to avoid errors and make a more informed decision.” (internal citation omitted)). To preserve the integrity of this process, “[t]he opportunity for comment must be a meaningful opportunity,” Prometheus Radio, 652 F.3d at 450 (alteration in original), to have interested parties share their views, and to have the agency consider them with an “open mind,” Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 517-19.

The notice and comment exercise surrounding the Final Rules does not reflect any real open-mindedness toward the position set forth in the IFRs.²⁴ First, as the Government admits, the minor changes to the Final Rules do not “alter the fundamental substance of the exemptions set forth in the IFRs.” Dkt. 107-1 at 8. Second, the reasons the Agencies supplied for promulgating the Final Rules simply echoed those provided for issuing the IFRs. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,552, 57,609. These rationales do not show the “flexible and open-minded attitude” the notice-and-comment process requires. Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 511. Together, the Agencies’ justifications for avoiding notice and comment to the IFRs, and the fact that the IFRs and the Final Rules are virtually identical, suggest that the opportunity for comment was not a “meaningful” one in the way the APA requires. Prometheus Radio, 652 F.3d at 450.

Lastly, even setting aside the Agencies’ lack of open-mindedness, the IFRs also impaired the rulemaking process by altering the Agencies’ starting point in considering the Final Rules. In NRDC, our Court rejected the EPA’s argument that the opportunity for post-promulgation comment remedied the EPA's initial failure to promulgate a rule through notice-and-comment rulemaking:

[t]o allow the APA procedures in connection with the [new rule] to substitute for APA procedures in connection with [the initial, procedurally defective rule] would allow [the] EPA to substitute post-promulgation notice and comment procedures for pre-promulgation notice and comment procedures at any time by taking an action without complying with the APA, and then establishing a notice and comment procedure on the question of whether that action should be continued. This would allow agencies to circumvent [our case law] and the APA. We cannot countenance such a result.

683 F.2d at 768 (citation omitted). This reasoning applies with equal force here. By first promulgating the IFRs that granted the expanded exemptions without notice and comment, the Agencies changed the question presented concerning the Final Rules from whether they should create the exemptions to whether they should depart from them. This starting position is impermissible under the APA. Id.; see also Sharon Steel, 597 F.2d at 381 (“Provision of prior notice and comment allows effective participation in the rulemaking process while the decisionmaker is still receptive to information and argument. After the final rule is issued, the petitioner must come hat-in-hand and run the risk that the decisionmaker is likely to resist change.” (citation omitted)).

In sum, because deficits in the promulgation of the IFRs compromised the procedural integrity of the Final

Rules, the States have demonstrated a likelihood of success in showing that the Final Rules are procedurally defective, and in turn, violate the APA.

C

There are also serious substantive problems with the Final Rules. More specifically, neither of the statutes upon which the Agencies rely, the ACA and RFRA, authorize or require the Final Rules. Thus, they were enacted “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right,” making them “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A), (C).

The Agencies argue that their authority under the ACA to issue preventive care guidelines includes the power to promulgate the Exemptions. This assertion is without textual support. The Women’s Health Amendment to the ACA, 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4), provides:

A group health plan and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements for— . . .

(3) with respect to infants, children, and adolescents, evidence-informed preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines supported by the [HRSA].

(4) with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings not described in paragraph

(1)[²⁵] as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the [HRSA] for purposes of this paragraph.

42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a). The authority to issue “comprehensive guidelines” concerns the type of services that are to be provided and does not provide authority to undermine Congress’s directive concerning who must provide coverage for these services. Section 300gg-13(a) unambiguously dictates that group health plans and health insurance issuers “shall provide” the preventive care services set forth in the HRSA-supported comprehensive guidelines, and “shall” not impose cost sharing. The term “shall” denotes a requirement, Prometheus Radio Proj. v. FCC, 824 F.3d 33,50 (3d Cir. 2016) (“Th[e] repeated use of ‘shall’ creates ‘an obligation impervious to . . . discretion.’” (omission in original) (quoting Lexecon Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998))), and HRSA’s authority to issue the guidelines does not empower it to ignore that requirement. Nothing from § 300gg-13(a) gives HRSA the discretion to wholly exempt actors of its choosing from providing the guidelines services. On the contrary, the mandate articulated in § 300gg-13(a) forecloses such exemptions.²⁶

²⁶ The Government argues that if the ACA does not grant the authority to issue the Exemptions, then HRSA was equally without authority to issue the Church Exemption and the Accommodation. This argument fails. Though the Church Exemption may seem facially at odds with § 300gg-13(a), Supreme Court precedent dictates

The Agencies' reliance on the language that directed HRSA to create the guidelines concerning women's preventive health care and the use of the phrase "as provided for in" such guidelines does not advance their position. The Agencies contrast § 300gg-13(a)(4)'s use of the phrase "as provided for in" comprehensive guidelines with a neighboring sub-section's provision addressing preventive care for infants, children, and adolescents, which is "provided for in the" comprehensive guidelines for those services. Compare 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(3) (describing "preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines"), with id. § 300gg-13(a)(4) (describing "preventive care and screenings as provided for in comprehensive guidelines"). They assert that the use of the word "as" in § 300gg-13(a)(4) gives HRSA authority to dictate the preventive services to be provided and who must provide them. This argument overlooks the clear explanation for the different language. When the ACA was passed, the comprehensive guidelines for children's preventive care already existed, but guidelines for women's preventive care were not yet written. Congress used the definite article "the" in § 300gg-13(a)(3) to refer to a narrow form of exemption for houses of worship. See 80 Fed. Reg. at 41,325 (describing the exemption for churches and houses of worship as "consistent with their special status under longstanding tradition in our society and under federal law"); see, e.g., Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & Sch. v. EEOC, 565 U.S. 171 (2012) (discussing the existence of a ministerial exception precluding application of employment legislation to a religious institution to respect churches' internal autonomy). The Accommodation likewise does not plainly run afoul of the ACA. Instead, it provides a process through which a statutorily identified actor "shall provide" the mandated coverage. In any event, the Agencies' authority to issue the Church Exemption and Accommodation is not before us.

those existing children’s preventive care guidelines. In § 300gg-13(a)(4), Congress addressed the women’s preventive care guidelines that were yet to be promulgated by stating “as provided for in the comprehensive guidelines.”

The Agencies’ interpretation of “comprehensive” as authorizing them to issue guidelines that exempt entities from complying with the Mandate likewise fails. Put simply, the discretion the statute grants HRSA to issue comprehensive guidelines concerning services to be provided does not include the power to exempt actors from the statute itself. This is borne out by the fact that the word “comprehensive” is also used to describe the children’s preventive care guidelines, and those guidelines do not exempt any statutorily required party from providing services. See HHS, Preventive Care Benefits for Children, <https://www.healthcare.gov/preventive-care-children> (last visited May 8, 2019). Congress was obviously aware of the existing children’s guidelines when it drafted the Women’s Health Amendment, and Congress’s use of “comprehensive” to describe both sets of guidelines conveys that it intended them to cover the same type of subject matter, namely health care services for the identified groups. See F.A.A. v. Cooper, 566 U.S. 284, 292 (2012) (“[W]hen Congress employs a term of art, it presumably knows and adopts the cluster of ideas that were attached to each borrowed word in the body of learning from which it was taken.” (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

Other portions of the ACA also show that Congress retained the authority to exempt certain employers from providing contraceptive coverage. In passing the ACA, Congress explicitly exempted grandfathered plans from the Contraceptive Mandate and other ACA requirements. 42 U.S.C. § 18011(a), (e). Congress also considered and rejected a statutory conscience amendment that would have operated similarly to the challenged Exemptions. 158 Cong. Rec. S1162, 1173-74 (2012). Between the substantially analogous exemption Congress rejected, and the one it decided to keep, Congress demonstrated that exempting specific actors from the ACA’s mandatory requirements is its job, not the Agencies. See United States v. Johnson, 529 U.S. 53, 58 (2000) (“When Congress provides exceptions in a statute,” we may infer “that Congress considered the issue of exceptions and, in the end, limited the statute to the ones set forth.”). Relatedly, by promulgating the Moral Exemption, which sought to do what Congress refused to do with the conscience amendment, the Agencies contravened Congress’s intent. See Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 147 (2000) (considering Congress’s prior refusal to pass laws as material to whether an agency’s interpretation of its statute is entitled to deference).

Because § 300gg-13(a) does not authorize the Agencies to exempt plans from providing the required coverage, the Agencies’ authority under the ACA to enact the Final Rules is without merit.

The Agencies’ effort to cast RFRA as requiring the Religious Exemption is also incorrect. Even assuming that RFRA provides statutory authority for the Agencies to issue regulations to address religious burdens the ²⁷ No party argues that RFRA authorizes or requires the Moral Exemption.

Contraceptive Mandate may impose on certain individuals, RFRA does not require the enactment of the Religious Exemption to address this burden.

RFRA provides that the federal government “[s]hall not substantially burden a person’s exercise of religion even if the burden results from a rule of general applicability,” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(a), unless “that application of the burden to the person—(1) is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest; and (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest,” id. § 2000bb-1(b). “[A] person whose religious exercise has been burdened in violation of this section” may seek relief in a judicial proceeding. Id. § 2000bb-1(c). Thus, RFRA authorizes a cause of action for government actions that impose a substantial burden on a person’s sincerely-held religious beliefs, and provides a judicial remedy via individualized adjudication. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-3(a); City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 529 (1997) (“[RFRA] prevents and remedies laws which are enacted with the unconstitutional object of targeting religious beliefs and practices.”). Because Congress has deemed the courts the adjudicator of private rights of actions under RFRA, Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal, 546 U.S. 418, 434 (2006) (holding RFRA “plainly contemplates that courts would . . . consider whether exceptions are required under the test set forth by Congress” (emphasis omitted)), we owe the Agencies no deference when reviewing determinations based upon RFRA, see Adams Fruit Co., Inc. v. Barrett, 494 U.S. 638, 649 (1990) (declining to defer to an agency’s statutory interpretation where Congress “expressly established the Judiciary and not the [agency] as the adjudicator of private rights of action arising under the statute”).

A prima facie RFRA case requires a plaintiff to prove that the government imposed a substantial burden on religious exercise. Mack v. Warden Loretto FCI, 839 F.3d 286, 304 (3d Cir. 2016). A substantial burden exists if

(1) a follower is forced to choose between following the precepts of his religion and forfeiting benefits otherwise generally available to other [persons] versus abandoning one of the precepts of his religion in order to receive a benefit; or (2) the government puts substantial pressure on an adherent to substantially modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs.^[28]

Real Alternatives, Inc. v. Sec’y Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 867 F.3d 338, 371 (3d Cir. 2017) (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Supreme Court has directed that, when considering a requested accommodation to address the burden, “courts must take adequate account of the burdens a requested accommodation may impose on nonbeneficiaries.” Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 720 (2005) (referring to third parties who may face collateral consequences from accommodating an observer’s burden).²⁹

²⁹ Although Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709 (2005), dealt with an application of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons

The Accommodation fulfills this directive as it provides a means for an observer to adhere to religious precepts and simultaneously allows women to receive statutorily-mandated health care coverage.

RFRA does not require the broad exemption embodied in the Final Rule nor to make voluntary a notice of the employer’s decision not to provide such coverage to avoid burdening those beliefs. As our Court has explained, the self-certification form does not trigger or facilitate the provision of contraceptive coverage because coverage is mandated to be otherwise provided by federal law. Federal law, rather than any involvement by the [employers] in filling out or submitting the self-certification form, creates the obligation of the insurance issuers and third-party administrators to provide coverage for contraceptive services. . . .

[And] the submission of the self-certification form does not make the [employers] “complicit” in the provision of contraceptive coverage.

Geneva Coll. v. Sec’y of U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 778 F.3d 422, 437-38 (3d Cir. 2015) (emphasis omitted), vacated and remanded sub nom. Zubik, 136 S. Ct. 1557.³⁰

Act (“RLUIPA”), we have said that RLUIPA and RFRA “are analogous for the purpose of the substantial burden test,” and we may therefore may apply RLUIPA law. Mack, 839 F.3d at 304 n.103; see Holt v. Hobbs, 135 S. Ct. 853, 860 (2015).

³⁰ While Zubik vacated our opinion in Geneva College, it did not reach the merits of the Accommodation nor did it “attack our reasoning.” Real Alternatives, 867 F.3d at 356 n.18. After Zubik,

The religious objectors who oppose the Accommodation mechanism disapprove of “what follows from” filing the self-certification form, but under Free Exercise jurisprudence, we examine the conduct of the objector, not third parties. Id. at 439-40. Here, through the Accommodation process, “the actual provision of contraceptive coverage is by a third party,” so any possible burden from the notification procedure is not substantial. Id. at 442. For these reasons, RFRA does not require that the Agencies permit religious objectors to decline to provide contraceptive coverage without notifying their insurance issuer, TPA, HHS, or the employees.

Contrary to the Agencies’ assertions in the Rule, the Supreme Court has not held that the Accommodation imposes substantial burdens on religious rights. Hobby Lobby ruled that closely-held corporations are entitled to take advantage of the Accommodation process rather than facing fines for non-compliance with the contraceptive mandate, observing that the Accommodation was a less restrictive alternative to forcing objectors to choose between adhering to the mandate or violating their sincerely-held beliefs. 573 U.S. at 730-31. While the Court “did not decide” whether the Accommodation “complies with RFRA,” it found that “[a]t a minimum . . . it does not impinge on that plaintiffs’ religious belief that providing insurance coverage for [certain contraceptives] violates their religion, and it serves HHS’s stated interests equally well.” Id. at 731; see also Zubik, 136 S. Ct. at 1561 (Sotomayor, J., concurring) (“The opinion does not . . . endorse the petitioners’ position that the existing regulations substantially burden their religious exercise or that contraceptive coverage must be provided through a separate policy, with a separate enrollment process.” (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)); Wheaton, 573 U.S. at 960 (noting that Hobby Lobby “expressly rel[ie]d on the availability of the religious-nonprofit accommodation” to reach its holding).

Furthermore, the Religious Exemption and the new optional Accommodation would impose an undue burden on nonbeneficiaries—the female employees who will lose coverage for contraceptive care. The Agencies downplayed this burden on women, contradicting Congress’s mandate that women be provided contraceptive coverage. “No tradition, and no prior decision under RFRA, allows a religion-based exemption when the [A]ccommodation would be harmful to others—here, the very persons the contraceptive coverage requirement was designed to protect.” Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. at 764 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting). As the Agencies recognize, the record shows that thousands of women may lose contraceptive coverage if the Rule is enforced and frustrate their right to obtain contraceptives. Id. at 727 (citation omitted); 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4) (directing the enactment of the Women’s Preventive Services Guidelines, which include contraceptives).

In short, the status quo prior to the new Rule, with the Accommodation, did not infringe on the religious exercise of covered employers, nor is there a basis to conclude the Accommodation process infringes on the religious exercise of any employer. For these reasons, RFRA does not demand the Religious Exemption.

Because the States demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits as to their APA claim, we next turn to the remaining equitable factors. To obtain a preliminary injunction, a plaintiff must “demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 22 (emphasis omitted). Because the States cannot collect money damages under the APA,³¹ 5 U.S.C. § 702 (enabling claimants to obtain “relief other than money damages”); see also California II, 911 F.3d at 581, the States will suffer irreparable harm if the Rules are enforced. The States will face unredressable financial consequences from subsidizing contraceptive services, providing funds for medical care associated with unintended pregnancies, and absorbing medical expenses that arise from decreased use of contraceptive medications for other health conditions. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding that the States demonstrated a likelihood of irreparable harm.

Furthermore, because the current Accommodation does not substantially burden employers’ religious exercise and the Exemption is not necessary to protect a legally-cognizable interest, the States’ financial injury outweighs any purported injury to religious exercise. Moreover, the public interest favors minimizing harm to third-parties by ensuring that women who may lose ACA guaranteed contraceptive coverage are able to maintain access to the preventive care to which they are entitled under the ACA and HRSA’s comprehensive guidelines while final adjudication of the Rules is pending. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the balance of the equities and the public interest both favor issuing an injunction.

Having determined that a preliminary injunction is warranted, the final question we address is whether the District Court abused its discretion by enjoining the Final Rules nationwide. “Crafting a preliminary injunction is an exercise of discretion and judgment, often dependent as much on the equities of a given case as the substance of the legal issues it presents.” Trump v. Int’l Refugee Assistance Project, 137 S. Ct. 2080, 2087 (2017) (per curiam). While courts are vested with the power to issue equitable relief with a nationwide reach, see Texas, 809 F.3d at 188 (quoting U.S. Const. art. III, § 1), they must ensure that “injunctive relief [is] no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to plaintiffs,” Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharm. Co., 290 F.3d 578, 598 (3d Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). We must also bear in mind that the purpose of injunctions is “not to conclusively determine the rights of the parties, but to balance the equities as the litigation moves forward.” Trump, 137 S. Ct. at 2087 (internal citation omitted).

Mindful of these considerations, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a nationwide injunction is necessary to afford complete relief to the States and that it is not “more burdensome to the defendant that necessary” to provide such relief.³² Groupe SEB USA, Inc. v. Euro-Pro Operating LLC, 774 F.3d 192, 206 (3d Cir. 2014) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). First, our APA case law suggests that, at the merits stage, courts invalidate—without qualification—unlawful administrative rules as a matter of course, leaving their predecessors in place until the agencies can take further action. See, e.g., Prometheus Radio, 652 F.3d at 453-54 & n.25 (vacating procedurally defective rule and leaving the prior rule in effect); Council Tree Commc’ns, Inc. v. FCC, 619 F.3d 235, 258 (3d Cir. 2010) (same). Congress determined that rule-vacatur was not unnecessarily burdensome on agencies when it provided vacatur as a standard remedy for APA violations. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2) (“The reviewing court shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action” that is outside an agency’s authority, or “without observance of procedure required by law,” among other things). While vacatur is the ultimate remedy the States seek, and that is not the relief being granted here, by enjoining enforcement of the Rules we provide a basis to ensure that a regulation that the States have shown likely to be proven to be unlawful is not effective until its validity is finally adjudicated.

Second, a nationwide injunction is necessary to provide the States complete relief. Many individuals work in a state that is different from the one in which they reside. See Amici Curiae Massachusetts, et al., Br. at

24 (“Mass. Amici Br.”) (stating that 14% of the workforce in New Jersey and 5.4% in Pennsylvania work out of state, comprising more than 800,000 workers in total). An injunction geographically limited to the States alone will not protect them from financial harm, as some share of their residents who work out-of-state will lose contraceptive coverage originally provided through employers in non-enjoined states who will exempt themselves. Women covered by these plans who live in the States will seek state-funded services, and a state specific injunction will not be sufficient to prevent the resulting financial harm.

Out-of-state college attendance further exacerbates the States’ injury. As the Moral Exemption points out, “[o]nly a minority of students in higher education receive health insurance coverage from plans arranged by their colleges or universities.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,564; 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,619. Instead, most of these students remain on their parents’ employer-based plans. Mass. Amici Br. at 26. The States host many such students at their colleges. “Each year, for example, Pennsylvania takes in more than 32,000 first-time out-of-state students alone—the second most of any state in the country.” Mass. Amici Br. at 25 (citing Nat’l Ctr. For Educ. Statistics, Residence and Migration of All First-Time Degree/Certificate-Seeking Undergraduates, Digest of Education Statistics (2017)). In the absence of a nationwide injunction, students attending school in the States may lose contraceptive coverage from their parents’ out-of-state plans, again leaving programs within the States to pick up the bill.³³ In light of the impact of

³³ It is also likely that residents of the States will attend out-of-state schools that invoke the Exemptions, and that such students will

these interstate activities, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a nationwide injunction was necessary to afford the States complete relief.³⁴ seek contraceptive services through programs in their home states, also giving rise to fiscal injuries to the States that only a nationwide injunction can remedy.

³⁴ The Government also argues that a nationwide injunction takes a toll on the court system, foreclosing “adjudication by a number of different courts and judges,” Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702 (1979), thereby preventing legal questions from “percolating” throughout the court system, Gov’t Br. at 79-80. The argument has little force in this case. First, other federal courts have examined substantially the same legal issues as we confront here. See generally Massachusetts, 923 F.3d 209; California II, 911 F.3d 558. Second, the extensive litigation surrounding the Exemption and Accommodation have allowed for an airing of the legal issues. See Petition for Writ of Certiorari at 27, The Little Sisters of the Poor Jeanne Jugan Residence v. California (No. 18-1192) (“Further percolation is unnecessary. . . . [T]his issue was adjudicated by ten courts of appeals and dozens of district courts. . . . The arguments have all been aired.”). Thus, there is no “percolation” problem here.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

No. 17-4540

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, PLAINTIFF

v.

DONALD J. TRUMP, DONALD J. WRIGHT,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, STEVEN T. MNUCHIN,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
RENE ALEXANDER ACOSTA AND THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, DEFENDANTS

Filed: Dec. 15, 2017

The interests at stake in this litigation are great, but the issues that must be decided here on Plaintiff's Motion for a Preliminary Injunction are narrow. This case implicates access to healthcare, religious freedom, women's rights, and executive power. However, the Court currently addresses only two precise questions: Did the Defendants here follow the proper procedure in issuing new rules that greatly expand exemptions to the law requiring health plans to cover women's preventive services at no cost, and do the new rules contradict the text of the statute that they are meant to interpret?

Plaintiff, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (“Commonwealth”), seeks to enjoin enforcement of two Interim Final Rules (“New IFRs”), referred to as the Moral Exemption Rule and the Religious Exemption Rule, modifying the Affordable Care Act. The New IFRs were issued by the Departments of Health and Human Services, the Department of Treasury, and the Department of Labor on October 6, 2017. They permit employers to opt out of providing no-cost contraceptive coverage on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs or sincerely held moral convictions. The parties here have vastly different perspectives on the import of the New IFRs. The Defendants assert that they are meant to permit a small number of religious objectors to opt out of covering contraceptive services in their employer-sponsored health plans because the requirement to provide contraceptive coverage imposes a substantial burden on their exercise of religion. Quite to the contrary, the Commonwealth argues that the Rules allow almost any employer to withhold insurance coverage for contraceptive services from their female employees, thus impacting millions of women—all in contravention of the Affordable Care Act and the United States Constitution.

The Commonwealth has sued President Donald J. Trump, United States Secretary of Health and Human Services Donald J. Wright,¹ United States Secretary of the Treasury Steven T. Mnuchin, and United States Secretary of Labor Rene Alexander Acosta in their official capacities, as well as each of their agencies (collectively, “Defendants”). It now seeks to enjoin the Defendants from enforcing the New IFRs for a variety of constitutional and statutory violations. For the reasons explained below, the Motion for a Preliminary Injunction shall be granted.

I. Background²

In March 2010, Congress enacted the Affordable Care Act. See Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA), Pub. L. No. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119 (2010). The ACA included a provision called the Women’s Health Amendment, which mandated that group health plans and health insurance issuers offering group or individual health insurance provide coverage for preventive health services and screenings for women without cost-sharing responsibilities. The preventive services that must be covered include, “with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA).” See 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4). Thus, Congress left the decision about which preventive care and screenings should be covered by the ACA up to the HRSA, which is an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

The HRSA commissioned the Institute of Medicine (“the Institute”) to issue recommendations identifying what specific preventive women’s health services should be covered under the ACA’s mandate. See 77 Fed. Reg. 8725-26. The Institute is an arm of the National Academy of Sciences, an organization that Congress established for the explicit purpose of furnishing advice to the federal government. See Pub. Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 460 n.11 (1989). The Institute, in turn, convened a committee of sixteen members (the “Committee”), including specialists in disease prevention, women’s health issues, adolescent health issues, and evidence-based guidelines, to formulate specific recommendations. The Committee defined preventive health services to include measures “shown to improve well-being and/or decrease the likelihood or delay the onset of a targeted disease or condition.” Institute, Clinical Prevention Services for Women: Closing the Gaps 23 (2011) (“Institute Report”).

On July 19, 2011, the Institute, through the Committee, issued a comprehensive report that identified health services that should be covered under the Women’s Health Amendment. Id. at 8-12. It recommended that the ACA cover “the full range of [FDA]-approved contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling for women with reproductive capacity.” Id. at 109-10. The Committee considered: (1) the prevalence of unintended pregnancy in the United States; (2) potential health risks of pregnancy; (3) that decreased intervals between pregnancies lead to an “increased risk of adverse pregnancy outcomes”; (4) the effectiveness of contraceptives in preventing unintended pregnancy; (5) the health benefits of contraceptives for other diseases and conditions; and (6) the barrier to contraceptive access presented by its cost. See id. at 104-10.

Original Religious Exemption

On August 1, 2011, HRSA adopted the Institute’s recommendations in guidelines, which required, among other things, that plans must cover all FDA-approved contraceptive methods (“Contraceptive Mandate”). 45 C.F.R. § 147.130(a)(1)(iv); 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-2713(a)(1)(iv); 26 C.F.R. § 54.9815-2713(a)(1)(iv). This requirement applied to all health insurers offering individual or group insurance, as well as all group health plans, with the exception of certain “grandfathered” plans. See 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-1251. Simultaneously, the Departments of HHS, Labor, and the Treasury (“the Agencies” or “Defendant Agencies”) also promulgated an Interim Final Rule (“IFR”) exempting certain religious employers from providing contraceptive services (“Original Religious Exemption”). See 76 Fed. Reg. 46621. To take advantage of that exemption, an employer must: (1) have the inculcation of religious values as its purpose; (2) primarily employ people who share its religious tenets; (3) primarily provide services to persons who share its religious tenets; and, (4) be a church, its integrated auxiliary, or a convention or association of a church, all of which are exempt from taxation under 26 U.S.C. § 501(a). See id. at 46623.

Second Religious Exemption and Accommodation Process

Following several legal challenges to the Contraceptive Mandate, the Agencies began to consider changes to the religious exemptions. In March 2012, they issued an Advanced Notice of Proposed Rulemaking concerning a potential accommodation process for religious objectors to the Contraceptive Mandate. 77 Fed. Reg.

16501. After a comment period, they then issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking proposing changes to the definition of religious organizations in the exemption and creating an accommodation process for religious objectors to the Contraceptive Mandate. 78 Fed. Reg. 8456. The Agencies published final regulations on July 2, 2013 (“Second Religious Exemption”). See 78 Fed. Reg. 39870. These regulations redefined a religious employer to only refer to churches, their integrated auxiliaries, and conventions or associations of churches, eliminating the need to fulfill the first three requirements of the prior regulations of the exemption. Upon a covered entity claiming the exemption, the provider or administrator would then have to provide the legally required contraceptive services directly to women covered under the employer’s plan (“Accommodation Process”).

Third Religious Exemption and Accommodation Process

Following enactment of the ACA and the Second Religious Exemption, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to decide whether the Contraceptive Mandate violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (RFRA). In Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014), the Supreme Court concluded that applying the Contraceptive Mandate to closely held corporations violated RFRA. In Wheaton Coll. v. Burwell, 134 S. Ct. 2806 (2014), the Court identified an alternative process by which Wheaton College could comply with the Contraceptive Mandate without informing its health insurer or third-party administrator: The Court permitted Wheaton College to “inform[] the Secretary of Health and Human Service in writing that it . . . has religious objections to providing coverage for contraceptive services. Id. at 2807. In response to Hobby Lobby and Wheaton College, the Agencies issued a third set of IFRs to augment the Accommodation Process to comply with the Supreme Court's orders. See 79 Fed. Reg. 51092, 51118 (expanding the Accommodation Process to include for-profit corporations and to adjust the Accommodation Process). The Agencies finalized the IFRs on July 14, 2015 ("Third Religious Exemption"). See 80 Fed. Reg. 41318, 41324.

One year later, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to decide whether the Accommodation Process violated RFRA. The question before the Supreme Court was whether the requirement to notify plaintiffs' insurers of their religious objections substantially burdened their exercise of religion in violation of RFRA. The Supreme Court did not address the question head on. Rather, it vacated the judgments of the courts of appeals and remanded the cases to provide the parties "an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward that accommodates petitioners' religious exercise while at the same time ensuring that women covered by petitioners' health plans 'receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.'" Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557, 1560 (2016). The Agencies then issued a Request for Information ("RFI") seeking public comment on options for modifying the Accommodation Process in light of Zubik. See 81 Fed. Reg. 47741. On January 9, 2017, the Department of Labor announced that it was unable to develop an approach that could "resolve the concerns of religious objectors, while still ensuring that the affected women receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.” Department of Labor, FAQs about Affordable Care Act Implementation Part 36 (Jan. 9, 2017).

Executive Order 13798: “Promoting Free Speech and Religious Liberty”

On May 4, 2017, President Trump issued an Executive Order “Promoting Free Speech and Religious Liberty.” Exec. Order No. 13798, 82 Fed. Reg. 21675. The Order directed the Agencies to “consider issuing amended regulations, consistent with applicable law, to address conscience-based objections to the preventive-care mandate promulgated under [the Women’s Health Amendment.]” Id. § 3.

Fourth Religious Exemption and Accommodation Process

The Agencies issued the New IFRs on October 6, 2017, citing a goal of being “consistent with the President’s Executive Order and the Government’s desire to resolve the pending litigation and prevent future litigation from similar plaintiffs.” See 82 Fed. Reg. 47792 (“Religious Exemption Rule”); 82 Fed. Reg. 47838 (“Moral Exemption Rule”). The New IFRs embodied two exemptions to the Contraceptive Mandate. First, under the Religious Exemption Rule, any non-profit or for-profit entity, whether closely held or publicly traded, may claim the exemption based on sincerely held religious beliefs. Second, under the Moral Exemption Rule, any non-profit or for-profit entity, so long as it is closely held, may claim the exemption based on sincerely held moral convictions.

The Religious Exemption and Moral Exemption Rules make significant changes from prior exemptions.

First, the new rules greatly expand the scope of who may opt out of the Contraceptive Mandate. Second, the rules render the Accommodation Process optional. Third, they eliminate requirements to provide notice of an intent to take advantage of either exemption. In other words, entities that stop providing contraceptive care “do not need to file notices or certifications of their exemption and [the Exemption Rules] do not impose any new notice requirements on them.”³ See 82 Fed. Reg. 47850, 47858. Fourth, the New IFRs permit employers to opt out of coverage on the basis of “sincerely held” religious beliefs and moral convictions.

The Agencies issued the new rules as IFRs and requested post-issuance comments by December 5, 2017, 60 days after they were issued. The Commonwealth filed this suit in the interim seeking to enjoin enforcement of the New IFRs because: (1) they fail to comply with the notice-and-comment procedures required by the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. § 551, et seq.; (2) they are “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” in violation of the substantive provisions of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A); (3) they violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000-2(a); (4) they violate the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. V; and, (5) they violate the Establishment Clause. U.S. Const. amend. I.

³ The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) still requires group health plans to notify plan participants of any change in coverage at least 30 or 60 days in advance. See 77 Fed. Reg. 8667.

II. Standing

A threshold question is whether the Commonwealth has standing. Standing is a litigant’s ticket to federal court. It is a constitutional requirement, “limit[ing] the category of litigants empowered to maintain a lawsuit in federal court to seek redress for a legal wrong.” Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547 (2016); U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2. The Commonwealth contends that it is properly before the Court because the New IFRs are causing, or will imminently cause, direct harm to its sovereign, quasi-sovereign and proprietary interests. Additionally, it asserts that it has parens patriae standing to protect the health, safety and well-being of its residents in ensuring that they enjoy access to healthcare services. The Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the Commonwealth has not suffered any legal wrong that would allow it to step foot into federal court.

“No principle is more fundamental to the judiciary’s proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies.” Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818 (1997). The doctrine of standing ensures that federal judicial power is properly limited to these cases or controversies. See Finkleman v. Nat’l Football League, 810 F.3d 187, 203 (3d Cir. 2016). Thus, if a plaintiff lacks standing, the case must be dismissed. See id. at 195. And, as Plaintiff, the Commonwealth has the burden of establishing that it has standing. See Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 411-12 (2013).

To do so, it must satisfy “the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing,” which “contains three elements.” Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). First, the Commonwealth must have suffered an “injury in fact,” defined as “an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Second, the Commonwealth must show that there is a “causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of.” Id. That is, the injury must be “fairly traceable” to the “challenged action of the defendant.” Id. Third, the Commonwealth must show that it is “likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Id. at 561 (internal quotation marks omitted). “Each element [of standing] must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.” Id. Thus, because the Commonwealth here seeks a preliminary injunction, it must adduce evidence demonstrating more than a mere possibility of injury in support of standing. Doe v. Nat’l Bd. of Med. Exam’rs, 199 F.3d 146, 152 (3d Cir. 1999).

a. Special Solitude

This standing inquiry must be made in the context of a clear recognition that States, like the Commonwealth here, “are not normal litigants for the purposes of invoking federal jurisdiction.” Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 518 (2007). Accordingly, a State is “entitled to special solicitude in [the] standing analysis” if it has: (1) a procedural right that authorizes it to challenge the conduct at issue; and, (2) a “stake in protecting its quasi-sovereign interests.” Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520; see also Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 151 (5th Cir. 2015), aff’d by an equally divided Court, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016).

In determining whether the Commonwealth has met these conditions, both Massachusetts v. EPA and Texas v. United States are instructive. In Massachusetts v. EPA, Massachusetts sued the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), alleging that global warming was “the most pressing environmental challenge of our time,” and that the EPA had “abdicated its responsibility under the Clean Air Act” when it failed to issue rules regulating the emission of greenhouse gases coming from cars. 549 U.S. at 505. The EPA challenged Massachusetts’ standing to bring the suit because greenhouse gas emissions are a widespread and generalized harm not unique to any specific plaintiff. See id. at 517. The Supreme Court nonetheless held that Massachusetts had special solicitude in the standing inquiry to challenge the EPA’s inaction: First, Massachusetts had a procedural right under the relevant statute, the Clean Air Act, which allowed it to “challenge agency action unlawfully withheld.” Id. (citing 42 U.S.C. § 7607(b)(1)). Second, Massachusetts had a quasi-sovereign interest—a “well-founded desire to preserve its sovereign territory” from the effects of global warming. Id. at 519. Indeed, Massachusetts “own[ed] a great deal of the ‘territory alleged to be affected.’” Id.; see also id. at 522 (affidavits noting that “rising seas have already begun to swallow Massachusetts’ coastal land.”). After concluding that Massachusetts was entitled to special solicitude in the standing analysis, the Supreme Court ultimately held that it had Article III standing to sue the EPA based on an injury to its territory that stemmed from global warming. See id. at 526.

In Texas v. United States, the Fifth Circuit, relying on Massachusetts v. EPA, similarly concluded that Texas, as a State, was entitled to special solicitude in seeking to enjoin implementation of the Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents program (DAPA). 809 F.3d at 154. In that case, non-citizens in Texas could apply for a driver's license if they presented "documentation issued by the appropriate United States agency that authorizes the applicant to be in the United States." See id. at 155 (quoting TEX. TRANSP. CODE § 521.142(a)). DAPA would have permitted at least 500,000 non-citizens to qualify for these driver's licenses. Id. Because Texas subsidized its licenses, it would have lost money for each license issued to a DAPA beneficiary. Id. Texas therefore sought injunctive relief to prevent DAPA's implementation. See id. at 149.

Applying the Massachusetts v. EPA framework, the Fifth Circuit first considered whether Texas had a procedural right to challenge DAPA. It concluded that Texas' use of the APA to challenge an "affirmative decision" made by a federal agency was similar to Massachusetts' use of the judicial review provision in the Clean Air Act to challenge the EPA's inaction. Id. at 152. Second, as to Texas' quasi-sovereign interest, the Fifth Circuit held that DAPA imposed "substantial pressure" on the State to change its laws to avoid bearing further costs from subsidizing additional driver's licenses. See id. at 153. The Fifth Circuit thus concluded that Texas had special solicitude in suing the federal government under the APA for injunctive relief. Id. at 154-55.

On writ of certiorari, the Supreme Court summarily affirmed the Fifth Circuit’s decision without opinion but with a notation that the affirmance was “by an equally divided Court.” United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam). Notably, one question certified by the Supreme Court included whether Texas had standing. See United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 906 (2016) (granting petition for writ of certiorari for, among other things, whether Texas had standing). Affirmances by an equally divided Supreme Court typically do not constitute binding precedent. See Eaton v. Price, 364 U.S. 263, 264 (1960). However, when the Supreme Court is equally divided on an issue of subject matter jurisdiction, it has determined that the proper course is to remand the issue of jurisdiction to a lower court. See Siliman v. Hudson River Bridge Co., 66 U.S. 582, 584-85 (1861). In other words, if the Supreme Court were equally divided on whether Texas had standing to enjoin DAPA, it would have remanded that issue to the Fifth Circuit. The Supreme Court did not and instead affirmed the Fifth Circuit. It therefore follows logically that a majority of the Supreme Court decided that Texas had standing to pursue its APA claim.⁴

There is no daylight between the 2015 Texas suit against the federal government and the current Commonwealth suit against the federal government. Like Texas, the Commonwealth challenges agency action in issuing regulations—here, the New IFRs. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 152. It is all the more significant that the ⁴ Even if the affirmance by an equally divided Supreme Court as it relates to subject matter jurisdiction were not binding, the Court is persuaded by the reasoning of the Fifth Circuit in Texas v. United States as it pertains to state standing.

Commonwealth, like Texas before it, sues to halt affirmative conduct made by a federal agency. See id. Whereas Massachusetts v. EPA concerned regulatory inaction—the EPA’s order denying a rulemaking petition—the Commonwealth’s case here challenges regulatory action that, it contends, affects its legally cognizable interests. See 549 U.S. at 514. Thus, it is especially appropriate to accord the Commonwealth “special solicitude.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 152-53. Furthermore, like Texas and Massachusetts, the Commonwealth seeks to protect a quasi-sovereign interest—the health of its women residents. See Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 600-01 (1982) (holding that a State has a “quasi-sovereign interest in the health and wellbeing—both physical and economic—of its residents in general.”). As the Commonwealth observes, contraceptives offer significant health benefits, including the prevention of unintended pregnancies, and the treatment of menstrual disorders, acne or hirsutism, and pelvic pain. This quasi-sovereign interest in safeguarding the health and wellbeing of its women residents is inextricably intertwined with the Commonwealth’s alleged future fiscal injury that, as will be discussed later, goes to the heart of its Article III standing. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 153 (concluding that DAPA affected quasi-sovereign interest by “imposing substantial pressure” on Texas to change its laws to avoid losing more money from driver license subsidies). According to the Commonwealth (and as addressed more fully below), the Agencies’ New IFRs will allow more employers to exempt themselves from the ACA’s Contraceptive Mandate. Consequently, the Commonwealth contends that Pennsylvanian women will seek state-funded sources of contraceptive care. Such a course of action will likely cause the Commonwealth to expend more funds to protect its quasi-sovereign interest in ensuring that women residents receive adequate contraceptive care. The Commonwealth, then, meets the two conditions outlined in Massachusetts v. EPA and shall be accorded special solicitude in the standing analysis.

b. Article III Standing

As previously stated, the three pillars of standing are injury in fact, causation, and redressability. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. First, an agency rule that has “a major effect on the states’ fiscs” is sufficient to find injury in fact. Texas, 809 F.3d at 152; id. at 155 (Texas “satisfied the first standing requirement by demonstrating that it would incur significant costs in issuing driver’s licenses to DAPA beneficiaries.”); see also Wyoming v. Oklahoma, 502 U.S. 437, 448 (1992) (holding that Wyoming had Article III standing because it undisputedly suffered a “direct injury in the form of a loss of specific tax revenues”); Danvers Motor Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 432 F.3d 286, 291 (3d Cir. 2005) (“While it is difficult to reduce injury-in-fact to a simple formula, economic injury is one of its paradigmatic forms.”).

The New IFRs will likely inflict a direct injury upon the Commonwealth by imposing substantial financial burdens on State coffers. Specifically, the Commonwealth will have to increase its expenditures for State and local programs providing contraceptive services. This is not a speculative harm. As the Defendants themselves noted in issuing one of the New IFRs, “there are multiple Federal, State, and local programs that provide free or subsidized contraceptives for low-income women.” 82 Fed. Reg. 47803. As more women residents of the Commonwealth are deprived of contraceptive services through their insurance plans and turn to these State and local programs, the Commonwealth will likely make greater expenditures to ensure adequate contraceptive care. And although Defendants point out that the Commonwealth has not yet identified a woman resident of Pennsylvania who has lost contraceptive coverage as a result of the New IFRs, the Commonwealth need not sit idly by and wait for fiscal harm to befall it. See McNair v. Synapse Group Inc., 672 F.3d 213, 223 (3d Cir. 2012) (“When, as in this case, prospective relief is sought, the plaintiff must show that he is “likely to suffer future injury” from the defendant’s conduct.”) (quoting City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 105 (1983)). As the New IFRs themselves estimate, they will cause at least 31,700 women to lose contraceptive coverage. 82 Fed. Reg. 47821.

Indeed, the Commonwealth’s affidavits confirm that its women residents will come to rely more on State-funded sources. The Acting Executive Deputy Secretary for the Commonwealth’s Department of Human Services concludes that it would not be unreasonable to expect women who do not receive contraceptive care from their insurers to rely on government-funded programs. See Decl. of Leesa Allen ¶ 23 (“Allen Decl.”). The Executive Deputy Insurance Commissioner for the Commonwealth echoes a similar view, expecting women who lose contraceptive coverage to seek coverage from State-funded programs (or pay for the contraceptives themselves). See Decl. of Seth A. Mendelsohn (“Mendelsohn Decl.”) ¶ 15. The CEO of Planned Parenthood Southeastern Pennsylvania also expects that, as a result of the New IFRs, many low-income women will have to rely on government-funded programs to obtain contraceptive care. See Decl. of Dayle Steinberg (“Steinberg Decl.”) ¶¶ 24-25. The Commonwealth has furthermore provided evidence from a doctor who practices in Pennsylvania acknowledging that she directs uninsured, low-income women to State programs for contraceptive services. See Tr. 177-78. At bottom, just as Texas’ estimated loss due to DAPA supported injury in fact, so too does the Commonwealth’s estimated loss due to the New IFRs support injury in fact. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 155.

Second, the Commonwealth’s financial injury is “fairly traceable” to issuance of the New IFRs. By their terms, they expand the scope of the existing religious exemption rule as well as allow employers a new rationale for refusing to provide employees with contraceptive coverage if the refusal is “based on sincerely held moral convictions.” In short, the New IFRs allow more employers to stop providing contraceptive coverage. And as the Commonwealth’s various affidavits show, State officials expect that once employers take advantage of the New IFRs more women residents will seek contraceptive care through State-funded programs. The Commonwealth has thus shown a causal connection between the New IFRs and its financial injury.

Defendants, however, cite to Pennsylvania v. New Jersey, 426 U.S. 660, 664 (1976), and argue that the injury is not “fairly traceable” to the New IFRs because the Commonwealth’s fiscal injury is “self-inflicted.” According to Defendants, the Commonwealth cannot shoot itself in the foot and then hobble into federal court by premising injury in fact on costs that flow from elective State programs that offer contraceptive care services to residents.

Pennsylvania v. New Jersey is distinguishable. In that case, Pennsylvania voluntarily gave tax credits to Pennsylvania residents who paid taxes in New Jersey. Id. at 663. Pennsylvania proceeded to sue New Jersey, contending that the New Jersey tax injured Pennsylvania's fiscs and was constitutionally impermissible. Id. at 662. The Supreme Court found that Pennsylvania lacked standing because the injuries to its fiscs were "self-inflicted," resulting, as they did, from a decision of its state legislature. Id. at 664. Pennsylvania was not allowed to "complain about damage inflicted by its own hand" when it enacted a law that incorporated the legislative choices of New Jersey. Id. The harm could have been avoided if Pennsylvania simply changed the law so that it no longer extended credits for taxes paid to New Jersey. See id. Here, by contrast, funding for the Commonwealth's programs does not explicitly incorporate the legislative choices of the federal government. Rather, the Commonwealth's described injuries flow from the unilateral decision by the Agencies to issue the New IFRs, which will likely cause Pennsylvanian women to seek contraceptive care from other sources, particularly state-funded sources. Consequently, the injunction that the Commonwealth seeks—to enjoin that unilateral federal agency decision—is untethered to any state law that the Commonwealth itself has enacted. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 158 ("The fact that Texas sued in response to a significant change in the defendants' policies shows that its injury is not self-inflicted.").

Third, the Commonwealth has satisfied the redressability requirement. Because the Commonwealth is asserting a procedural right under the APA to protect its interests, it “can assert that right without meeting all the normal standards for redressability and immediacy.” See Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 517-18. If, as here, the litigant is “vested with a procedural right, that litigant has standing if there is some possibility that the requested relief will prompt the injury-causing party to reconsider the decision that allegedly harmed the litigant.” Id. at 518. Enjoining the Agencies’ New IFRs based on APA claims should prompt them to reconsider the propriety of the Religious and Moral Exemptions Rules, “which is all a plaintiff must show when asserting a procedural right.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 161. In sum, the Commonwealth has shown that it has standing to pursue injunctive relief through its APA claims based on an injury to its fiscs.⁵

III. Legal Standard

As the Commonwealth has standing to pursue a preliminary injunction, the next step is to determine whether one is appropriate. A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy; it “should be granted only in limited circumstances.” American Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Winback & Conserve Program, Inc., 42 F.3d 1421, 1426-27 (3d Cir. 1994). “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). The “failure to establish any element . . . renders a preliminary injunction inappropriate.” NutraSweet Co. v. Vit-Mar Enters., Inc., 176 F.3d 151, 153 (3d Cir. 1999). The movant bears the burden of showing that these four factors weigh in favor of granting the injunction. See Opticians Ass’n of Am. v. Indep. Opticians of Am., 920 F.2d 187, 192 (3d Cir. 1990).

While the movant must show that each of these factors weighs in favor of granting an injunction, an injunction might be appropriate where a movant makes a particularly strong case on some factors, but not others. Thus, “courts must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief.” Reilly v. City of Harrisburg, 858 F.3d 173, 177-78 (3d Cir. 2017), as amended (June 26, 2017) (quoting Winter, 555 U.S. at 24). “[I]n a situation where factors of irreparable harm, interests of third parties and public considerations strongly favor the moving party, an injunction might be appropriate even though plaintiffs did not demonstrate as strong a likelihood of ultimate success as would be generally required.” Constructors Ass’n of W. Pa. v. Kreps, 573 F.2d 811, 815 (3d Cir. 1978). In addition, the court must weigh “[a]ll of [the four preliminary injunction] factors . . . together in the final decision and the strength of the plaintiff’s showing with respect to one may affect what will suffice with respect to another.” Marxe v. Jackson, 833 F.2d 1121, 1128 (3d Cir. 1987). The Third Circuit recently clarified in Reilly that a “movant for preliminary equitable relief must meet the threshold for the first two ‘most critical’ factors [—likelihood of success and irreparable harm]. If these gateway factors are met, a court then considers the remaining two factors and determines in its sound discretion if all four factors, taken together, balance in favor of granting the requested preliminary relief.” Reilly, 858 F.3d at 179. “How strong a claim on the merits is enough depends on the balance of the harms: the more net harm an injunction can prevent, the weaker the plaintiff’s claim on the merits can be while still supporting some preliminary relief.” Id.

a. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

In demonstrating the likelihood of success on the merits, a plaintiff need not show that it is more likely than not that he will succeed. Singer Mgmt. Consultants, Inc. v. Milgram, 650 F.3d 223, 229 (3d Cir. 2011) (en banc). Instead, a plaintiff must “show[] a reasonable probability of success on the merits.” American Express Travel Related Svcs., Inc. v. Sidamon-Eristoff, 669 F.3d 359, 366 (3d Cir. 2012). This requires a showing “significantly better than negligible, but not necessarily more likely than not.” Reilly, 858 F.3d at 179.

Because “courts should be extremely careful not to issue unnecessary constitutional rulings,” American Foreign Serv. Ass’n v. Garfinkel, 490 U.S. 153, 161 (1989) (per curiam), the Court addresses the statutory claims at issue—that Defendants violated the notice-and-comment procedures of the APA and that the New IFRs are “arbitrary, capricious, or not in accordance with law”—and finds it unnecessary, at this juncture, to proceed to the constitutional issues.

i. Administrative Procedure Act

1. Procedural Safeguards

The APA provides any interested party the right to participate in the rulemaking process by submitting data, views or arguments. See 5 U.S.C. § 553. “The APA provisions reflect a judgment by Congress that the public interest is served by a careful and open review of proposed administrative rules and regulations.” Phila. Citizens in Action v. Schweiker, 669 F.2d 877, 881 (3d Cir. 1982). “Section 553 was enacted to give the public an opportunity to participate in the rule-making process. It also enables the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those regulated.” Texaco, Inc. v. Fed. Power Comm’n, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3d Cir. 1969).

Accordingly, prior to promulgating regulations, administrative agencies must follow a procedure called “notice and comment rulemaking.” See 5 U.S.C. § 553. First, an agency must issue a general notice of proposed rulemaking. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b), 553(b). Then the agency must “give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views or arguments. . . .” Id. § 553(c). Last, “[a]fter consideration of the relevant matter presented, the agency shall incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and purpose.” Id. Defendants bypassed each of these procedures when issuing the New IFRs.

The APA requires a court to set aside agency action “found to be . . . without observance of procedure required by law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D). Thus, if Defendants did not comply with notice and comment provisions, the Court must preliminarily enjoin Defendants from enforcing the New IFRs unless there is a statutorily countenanced reason for their non-compliance. See Minard Run Oil Co. v. U.S. Forest Serv., 2009 WL 4937785, at *34 (W.D. Pa. 2009), aff’d, 670 F.3d 236 (3d Cir. 2011).

Although “[e]xemption from the terms of the Administrative Procedure Act are not lightly to be presumed . . . ,” Marcello v. Bonds, 349 U.S. 302, 310 (1955), there are limited exceptions to the requirement that all rules must be issued pursuant to notice-and-comment rulemaking. Defendants contend that two of those exceptions apply here. First, they argue that Congress expressly and impliedly authorized the Secretaries of HHS, Labor, and the Treasury to bypass notice and comment rulemaking with respect to the New IFRs. 5 U.S.C. § 559. Second, they argue that there is no need for notice-and-comment rulemaking because they have found “good cause” that the notice and comment procedure is, in this instance, “impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.” Id. § 553(b)(B).

*i. Statutory Authorization to Bypass
Notice and Comment*

At the outset, it should be noted that the ACA contains no provision expressly authorizing the Defendant Agencies or their respective Secretaries to bypass the APA’s notice and comment requirements, and indeed, Defendants cite none. Rather, in justifying their side-step of the strictures of the notice and comment procedure, they find express and implied authorizations for their actions through various statutes besides the ACA.

Defendants’ argument, matryoshkanesque in its construction, proceeds as follows: In 1996, Congress passed the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA), Pub. L. No. 104-191 (1996), which regulates group health plans and some individual health insurance policies. HIPAA amended certain provisions of the United States Code to provide that “[t]he [respective] Secretary may promulgate any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate to carry out this [chapter.]” See 29 U.S.C. § 1191c; 26 U.S.C. § 9833; 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-92.⁶ In 2010, Congress passed the ACA, which also amended those same sections of the United States Code to require health plans to cover certain preventive women’s services. HHS interpreted the preventive service requirement to include contraceptive services. The requirement to provide contraceptive services was thus codified in the chapters of the United States Code as modified by HIPAA in 1996. Thus, according to Defendants, HIPAA’s amendments, which permit issuance of IFRs “appropriate to carry out this [chapter],” also encompass authorization to issue IFRs to carry out the ACA.

The argument is creative, but not supported by law. As to express authorization, in order to authorize an agency to bypass notice and comment, a subsequent statute must be clear that it abrogates the APA. See 5 U.S.C. § 559; Coalition for Parity, Inc. v. Sebelius, 709 F. Supp. 2d 10, 18 (D.D.C. 2010). And as Coalition for Parity held, the provision of HIPAA that Defendants here rely on says nothing about overruling the APA, let alone notice and comment procedures. Id. HIPAA, then, does not provide express authorization to bypass the notice and comment requirements of the APA in this case. See id.

As to implied authorization, the relevant standard to determine if Congress sub silentio allowed an agency to avoid notice and comment is “whether Congress has established procedures so clearly different from those required by the APA that it must have intended to displace the norm.” Asiana Airlines v. FAA, 134 F.3d 393, 397 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Defendants rely on two cases, Asiana Airlines and Methodist Hospital of Sacramento v. Shalala, 38 F.3d 1225, 1237 (D.C. Cir. 1994), for the proposition that Congress has impliedly authorized the Agencies here to bypass notice and comment and issue IFRs.

In both Asiana Airlines and Methodist Hospital, the D.C. Circuit held that certain IFRs could be issued without complying with notice and comment, but both cases are inapposite. The statutory language from those cases, involving respectively the Federal Aviation Reauthorization Act and the Social Security Amendments of 1983, expressly abrogated APA notice and comment procedures because Congress, through its use of the mandatory word “shall” in both pieces of legislation, commanded the agencies to issue interim final rules. See Asiana Airlines, 134 F.3d at 395 (“the Administrator shall publish . . . interim final rule[s]”) (citing 49 U.S.C. § 45301(b)(2)) (emphasis added); Methodist Hosp., 38 F.3d at 1236 n.18 (“[t]he Secretary shall cause to be published . . . a notice of the interim final DRG prospective payment rates . . . without the necessity for consideration of comments. . . .”) (citing 97 Stat. 168-69) (emphasis added). By contrast, the HIPAA provision here states that a “Secretary may promulgate any interim final rules as the Secretary determines are appropriate. . . .” See 29 U.S.C. § 1191c; 26 U.S.C. § 9833; 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-92 (emphasis added). The use of the term “may” is permissive rather than mandatory. See Barlow v. Collins, 397 U.S. 159, 165-66 (1970) (statute authorizing Secretary of Agriculture to promulgate regulations “as he may deem proper” does not preclude judicial review).⁷ There is, accordingly, no support in HIPAA for the Agencies’ avoidance of the notice and comment procedure.

*ii. Good Cause Exception to Bypass
Notice and Comment*

The second exception to notice-and-comment rule-making permits agencies to utilize IFRs “for good cause.” See 5 U.S.C. § 553. More specifically, the APA provides that notice and comment may be waived “when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.” Id. The “circumstances justifying reliance on the good cause exception are ‘indeed rare’ and will be accepted only after the court has examined closely proffered rationales justifying the elimination of public procedures.” Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc. v. EPA, 683 F.2d 752, 764 (3d Cir. 1982). The Third Circuit has cautioned that the good cause exception should be “narrowly construed.” United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498, 507 (3d Cir. 2013) (citations omitted).

Since the APA requires agencies availing themselves of the good cause exception to state their “finding[s] and a brief statement of reasons” for good cause “in the rules issued,” the Court will examine the proffered “good cause” reasons as stated in the New IFRs. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 47813-15; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47855-59. First, the Agencies found that excessive delay caused by notice and comment rulemaking would be contrary to public interest. Id. Second, the Agencies determined that the New IFRs were important to resolve ongoing litigation and ease the burdens imposed by them in order to prevent “continued uncertainty, inconsistency, and cost.” Id. Third, the Agencies determined that they had already received significant comments in past rounds of rulemaking as well as from the 2016 RFI, and therefore there was no need to repeat the notice-and-comment process again. Id. These arguments are considered seriatim.

As to their “excessive delay” justification, the Agencies contend that, because the Accommodation Process (in their view) violated RFRA, it was a matter of urgency to issue the New IFRs without going through the APA’s time-consuming notice and comment process.⁸ See id. However, urgency is not sufficient in the absence of a deadline imposed by Congress, the executive, or courts. See Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 511 (“Our prior decisions have recognized urgency alone as sufficient only when a deadline imposed by Congress, the executive, or the judiciary requires agency action in a timespan that is too short to provide a notice and comment period.”). None of the three branches of government have imposed any urgent deadline that could support circumventing notice and comment rulemaking. First, Congress has not spoken on this issue. Second, far from compelling any immediate action, President Trump’s Executive Order 13798 merely asks the Secretaries to “consider issuing amended regulations, consistent with applicable law, to address conscience-based objections to the preventive care mandate.” Executive Order 13798 § 3. Last, the Supreme Court has not imposed any deadline or called for urgent action either. In fact, the Supreme Court remanded the latest challenge to the Accommodation Process to give the parties “an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward.” Zubik, 136 S. Ct. at 1560. Though Defendants cite many cases in which courts have pressured them to resolve uncertainty regarding the Contraceptive Mandate, none of those courts have imposed any actual deadlines for issuing regulations.

“The desire to eliminate uncertainty, by itself, cannot constitute good cause.” Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 510. Even if it could, the Agencies’ stated need to resolve uncertainty is undercut by the request, contained in the New IFRs, for post-issuance comments regarding “whether these regulations expanding the exemption should be made permanent or subject to modification.” See 82 Fed. Reg. at 47814-15; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47855-56. The request for comments particularly as to whether the New IFRs should be modified “implicitly suggests that the rule[s] will be reconsidered [and] means the level of uncertainty is, at best, unchanged. . . . ” Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 511.

The Agencies stated in the New IFRs that the clarity offered by the expanded exemptions will decrease insurance costs; they hypothesize that groups with grandfathered health plans will wish to make changes to other components of their health plans in order to reduce costs, while still avoiding coverage for contraceptive services. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47815, 47856. Under the ACA, as long as grandfathered plans do not make any changes to their health coverage, they need not cover women’s preventive services. However, the New IFRs do not cite a single comment from an employer with a grandfathered plan which suggests that they will make changes to health plans in light of the new agency interpretation.⁹ This is merely speculation, unsupported by the record.

Last, the Agencies asserted in the New IFRs that notice and comment was unnecessary because the Agencies considered past comments and requested post-issuance comments. The Agencies received multiple rounds of comments on the first set of interim final regulations in 2010, on the interim final regulations in 2011, on the proposed changes to the religious employer exemption in 2012 and 2013, on the modifications to the Accommodation Process in 2015, and on the RFI issued in July 2016. And the Agencies received over 54,000 public comments in response to the July 2016 RFI which sought ways to expand the Accommodation Process.

⁹ Indeed, a search of “grandfather” in the hundreds of thousands of pages of the Administrative Record filed with the Court does not reveal a single comment from a policy holder with a grandfathered health plan who sought to change their health coverage without risking their grandfathered status. During Oral Argument, the Court asked Defendants to find comments in the Administrative Record demonstrating that group health plans with grandfathered status sought to change their health plans without forgoing their grandfathered status. Defendants admitted that they “have identified no particular comments.” Tr. 206. Instead, Defendants looked outside of the Administrative Record and cited just two cases from 2012 in which the litigating parties wanted to retain their grandfathered health plans without covering contraceptive services. See Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Atlanta v. Sebelius, No. 1:12-CV-03489-WSD (N.D. Ga. 2014); Diocese of Fort Wayne-S. Bend, Inc. v. Sebelius, 988 F. Supp. 2d 958 (N.D. Ind. 2013). However, neither case shows that those entities sought to change their coverage in order to maintain their grandfathered status in 2017.

Defendants cite no case, and research has not disclosed any, finding that notice and comment is unnecessary where an agency has received ample commentary on its prior interpretations of the same law. In fact, the significance of this issue and the outpouring of public comments reflect the opposite: the overwhelming public interest demonstrates that notice and comment is critical. “The unnecessary prong of the exception . . . ‘is confined to those situations in which the administrative rule is a routine determination, insignificant in nature and impact, and inconsequential to the industry and to the public.’” Utility Solid Waste Activities Grp. v. EPA, 236 F.3d 749, 755 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (quoting South Carolina v. Block, 558 F. Supp. 1004, 1016 (D.S.C. 1983)). The significance of this litigation and the stakes involved, including hundreds of lawsuits, and several appeals to the Supreme Court, belies the Agencies’ purported reliance on the “unnecessary,” good cause exception for notice and comment.

The Agencies also assert that their provision for a post-issuance commentary period does away with the need for pre-issuance notice and comment. They solicited comments for 60 days following the issuance of the New IFRs. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 47792. None of the cases that Defendants cite support that position. Instead, each of them stand for the proposition that an agency may seek post-issuance commentary only if and only after having shown that it had good cause to avoid notice and comment rulemaking, a situation that is not present here.¹⁰

There are several reasons why post-issuance comments do not comply with the notice and comment provisions of the APA. First, there is nothing in the APA that provides for post-issuance commentary. Second, participants are less likely to influence agency action in later stages of the agency decision-making process. This is especially the case where an agency has already issued interim rules which suggest that it has decided what federal policy should be. Post-issuance commentary does not ameliorate the need for notice and comment because by the time agencies issue interim rules, they are less likely to heed public input. See United States v. Johnson, 632 F.3d 912, 929 (5th Cir. 2011) (“[P]arties will have a greater opportunity for influencing agency decision making if they participate at an early stage.”). Last, permitting post-issuance commentary carte blanche would write the notice and comment requirements out of the APA. See id.; United States v. Gould, 568 F.3d 459, 479 (4th Cir. 2009)

(“[R]equesting post-promulgation comments makes a sham of the APA’s rulemaking procedures.”); Paulsen v. Daniels, 413 F.3d 999, 1005 (9th Cir. 2005) (“[I]t is antithetical to the structure and purpose of the APA for an agency to implement a rule first, and then seek comment later.”).

Grasping at straws, Defendants argue that even if a single justification “standing alone” does not constitute good cause, the “combined effect” of several factors justified the Agencies’ reliance on the good cause exception. An underlying assumption of this argument is that “[e]ach of the factors” provides at least some support for a finding that the Agencies had good cause to dispense with notice and comment. They do not. The three proffered factors to dispense with notice and comment offer no support. There was no deadline, much less an urgent one, to implement new rules. The New IFRs did not resolve any uncertainty and, as this case demonstrates, have not prevented ongoing litigation. And the blizzard of prior comments that the Agencies have received in past rounds of notice and comment rulemaking actually demonstrates that further comments are necessary given the public interest in this matter.

Certainly, an inquiry into whether an agency has “properly invoked ‘good cause’ proceeds case-by-case, sensitive to the totality of the factors at play.” Alcaraz v. Block, 746 F.2d 593, 612 (9th Cir. 1984). And a court may consider the “combined effect” of multiple factors, which standing alone might not suffice to demonstrate “good cause.” See Nat’l Women, Infants, & Children Grocers Ass’n v. Food & Nutrition Serv., 416 F. Supp. 2d 92, 107 (D.D.C. 2006). But Defendants’ arguments—

even when viewed in their totality—provide no support for their proposition.¹¹

For the above reasons, it is likely that the Commonwealth will succeed on its claim that the Defendants did not follow proper procedures in issuing the New IFRs.

2. Substantive Provision

Under the APA, an administrative rule has no legal effect if it is “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). Pursuant to this standard, it is likely that the Commonwealth will also succeed on its substantive challenge against the New IFRs because they contradict the text of the statute that they purport to interpret.

While an agency’s interpretation of a statute is generally accorded great deference, an interpretation that conflicts with the statute’s plain language is not. See Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., ¹¹ Defendants’ failure to follow the APA’s notice and comment procedures was also not “harmless.” “[T]he ‘utter failure’ to comply with notice and comment cannot be considered harmless if there is any uncertainty at all as to the effect of that failure.” Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 516. Rather, failure to abide by notice and comment rulemaking will only be found harmless in instances such as “when the administrative record demonstrates that the conclusion reached in the administrative rule was the only possible conclusion.” Id. at 518. This is not the case here. In addition, the Defendant Agencies have never sought comments on whether publicly traded companies should be allowed to opt out of the Contraceptive Mandate for sincerely held religious reasons, whether a “moral exemption” should apply to the Mandate for all closely held corporations, or whether to exempt entities from additional notice requirements before opting out of providing contraceptive coverage for their employees.

467 U.S. 837 (1984). Chevron and its progeny dictate the appropriate framework for analyzing whether an agency’s interpretation of a statute is permissible. First, a court must determine whether Chevron applies. Chevron deference is only appropriate in situations where Congress delegated rulemaking authority to a particular agency. See Swallows Holding, Ltd. v. C.I.R., 515 F.3d 162, 168 (3d Cir. 2008). Next, “if the statutory language is clear and unambiguous, our inquiry ends and the plain meaning of the statute governs the action.” Id. at 170. While review of an agency’s interpretation under the “arbitrary and capricious” standard is decidedly narrow, an agency may not exercise its authority in a manner “inconsistent with the administrative structure that Congress enacted into law.” Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 126 (2000). Last, “[i]f the statute is ambiguous on the point, we defer at step two to the agency’s interpretation so long as the construction is ‘a reasonable policy choice for the agency to make.’” National Cable & Telecommunications Ass’n v. Brand X Internet Servs., 545 U.S. 967, 986 (2005) (quoting Chevron, 467 U.S. at 845).

i. Scope of HHS’ Statutory Authority

The takeaway is that Chevron deference does not extend to all agency action. In United States v. Mead, the Supreme Court explained that Chevron deference is only appropriate in situations where “Congress would expect the agency to be able to speak with the force of law.” 553 U.S. 218, 229 (2001). Here, Congress delegated authority to the HRSA, a division of HHS, to interpret the scope of “preventive care” as defined by the ACA. The problem is that HHS, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Treasury have, through the New IFRs, interpreted the statute in a manner inconsistent with its text.

It bears mentioning, at this time, the remarkable breadth of the New IFRs. They are the proverbial exception that swallows the rule. The New IFRs permit various entities, on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs or moral convictions, to opt out of providing contraceptive coverage—coverage that, under the text of the ACA as interpreted by the HRSA in August 2011, is supposedly mandatory. The Religious Exemption Rule allows all non-profit and for-profit entities, whether closely held or publicly traded, to deny contraceptive coverage based on sincerely held religious beliefs. The Moral Exemption Rule allows any non-profit or for-profit organization that is not publicly traded to deny contraceptive coverage for its employees for any sincerely held moral conviction. This means that boards of closely held corporations can vote, or their executives can decide, to deny contraceptive coverage for the corporation's women employees not just for religious reasons but also for any inchoate—albeit sincerely held—moral reason they can articulate. Who determines whether the expressed moral reason is sincere or not or, for that matter, whether it falls within the bounds of morality or is merely a preference choice, is not found within the terms of the Moral Exemption Rule. If one assumes that it is the Agency Defendants—or, indeed, any agency—then the Rule has conjured up a world where a government entity is empowered to impose its own version of morality on each one of us. That cannot be right. It “run[s] afoul of this country’s vast history of legislative protections that single out and safeguard religious freedom but not moral philosophy.” Real Alternatives, Inc. v. Sec’y Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 867 F.3d 338, 350 (3d Cir. 2017) (emphasis added).

A simple hypothetical illustrates the insidious effect of the Moral Exemption Rule. It would allow an employer with a sincerely held moral conviction that women do not have a place in the workplace to simply stop providing contraceptive coverage. And, it may do so in an effort to impose its normative construct regarding a woman’s place in the world on its workforce, confident that it would find solid support for that decision in the Moral Exemption Rule. It is difficult to comprehend a rule that does more to undermine the Contraceptive Mandate or that intrudes more into the lives of women.

ii. The Text of the ACA

Before analyzing whether the Agencies had authority to create the Moral and Religious Exemption Rules, a brief aside to RFRA is necessary. RFRA provides that government action cannot “substantially burden” the exercise of religion. It states that laws passed after 1993 are subject to RFRA “unless such law explicitly excludes such application. . . .” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-3(b). The ACA was passed after 1993 and is thus subject to RFRA.¹² In Hobby Lobby, the Supreme Court held that the ACA does not explicitly exclude application of RFRA. See Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. at 2775 n.30.

It follows that any exception to the ACA required by RFRA is permissible. Bearing that in mind—and putting the issue of RFRA’s application to the New IFRs on ice for now—the Court turns whether there is any language in the text of the ACA itself that would authorize the Agencies to issue the New IFRs—and concludes that there is not.

Congress created only a single exemption from the ACA’s statutory mandate to cover women’s preventive care and that is for “grandfathered health plans.” 42 U.S.C. § 18011(e). “When Congress provides exceptions in a statute . . . [t]he proper inference . . . is that Congress considered the issue of exceptions and, in the end, limited the statute to the ones set forth.” United States v. Johnson, 529 U.S. 53, 58 (2000). Given that there is no religious or moral exemption in the explicit text of the statute and there is one for grandfathered health plans, it cannot be assumed that Congress authorized the Agencies to create any additional exemptions.

The fact that the statute does not contain language specifically precluding the Agency Defendants from developing exemptions does not change this result. Even absent the maxim that the inclusion of an exemption in a statute must be interpreted to mean that Congress intended no additional exemptions, “[n]ot every silence is pregnant.” Burns v. United States, 501 U.S. 129, 136 (1991). Here, the mandatory language “shall”—found in the ACA’s requirement that covered health plans “shall cover . . . with respect to women, such additional preventive care” as provided for in the HRSA guidelines—indicates quite the opposite: no exemptions created by HHS are permissible (unless they are required by RFRA). “An inference drawn from congressional silence certainly cannot be credited when it is contrary to all other textual and contextual evidence of congressional intent.” Id. That conclusion carries particular weight here, because, in 2012, Congress explicitly rejected an attempt to add to the ACA an exemption similar to the Moral and Religious Rules. See S. Amdt. 1520, 112th Cong. (2011-2012); see also Brown & Williamson, 529 U.S. at 147 (rejection of an agency’s interpretation by Congress is a factor courts consider when determining the meaning of a statute).

Nevertheless, Defendants argue that the textual structure of the ACA permits HHS to proscribe the “manner or reach of the coverage.” They compare two subsections of the ACA, both of which provide for no-cost preventive care and screenings. The first concerns children, the second, women. Defendants then focus on the language in each subsection which authorizes the agency to issue guidelines regarding that subsection.¹³

¹³ The full text of the two subsections are as follows:

A group health plan and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements for —[the following services] . . .

(3) with respect to infants, children, and adolescents, evidence-informed preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration;

(4) with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings not described in paragraph (1) as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration for purposes of this paragraph.

42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(3)-(4) (emphasis added).

The subsection concerning children refers to “preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines” from the HRSA. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(3). In contrast, the subsection concerning women refers to “such additional preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in the comprehensive guidelines” from the HRSA. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4) (emphasis added). Defendants note that the word “as” precedes the words “provided for in the comprehensive guidelines” in the women’s subsection, but not the children’s subsection. Proceeding from the statutory maxim that statutes should be interpreted, if possible, to give each word operative effect, see Walters v. Metropolitan Educ. Enter., Inc., 519 U.S. 202, 209 (1997), Defendants conclude that the inclusion of the word “as” in the women’s subsection means that HRSA may determine not only the services covered by the ACA, but also the manner or reach of that coverage.

This extrapolation from the statutory inclusion of the word “as” must, pursuant to another principle of statutory interpretation, be analyzed by looking to the dictionary definition of the word. See Bonkowski v. Oberg Indus., Inc., 787 F.3d 190, 200 (3d Cir. 2015). The term “as” in this context is “[u]sed to indicate that something happens during the time when something else is taking place.” As, Oxford English Dictionary Online, June 2017. At the time Congress passed the ACA, the HRSA had already promulgated guidelines interpreting children’s preventive care. The HRSA had not promulgated such guidelines for women’s preventive care. Thus, the ACA requires coverage “provided for” in HRSA guidelines for children’s care and “as provided for” in HRSA guidelines for women’s care. Giving effect to the use of the word “as” leads to the conclusion that the

“as” is used in anticipation of HRSA issuing such guidelines and not to the conclusion that the ACA implicitly provides the Agencies with the authority to create non-statutory exemptions.

In sum, the ACA contains no statutory language allowing the Agencies to create such sweeping exemptions to the requirements to cover “preventive services,” which, as interpreted by those same agencies, include mandatory no-cost coverage of contraceptive services. Nor does any rule of statutory construction warrant these exemptions.

iii. Religious Freedom and Restoration Act

The Agency Defendants also argue that they were compelled by RFRA to create the Religious Exemption Rule. It should be noted at the outset that they specifically do not propound this argument with respect to the Moral Exemption Rule. Thus, since the text of the statute is clear that non-statutory exemptions are not permitted, and Defendants admit that RFRA provides no support for it, the Moral Exemption Rule is “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” under the APA. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). As set forth below, upon consideration of Defendants’ argument regarding RFRA, the Court reaches the same conclusion with respect to the Religious Exemption Rule.

a. RFRA Does Not Support the Agencies’ Interpretation

Turning now—finally—to the RFRA issue. One of the reasons the Agencies gave for issuing the New IFRs

is that the Accommodation Process imposes a substantial burden on the exercise of religion. The Accommodation Process, as discussed earlier, allows religious objectors to notify their healthcare administrator of their religious objection, and the administrator would then have to provide the legally required contraceptive services directly to women covered under the employer's plan. The Agencies' stated belief that the Accommodation Process now imposes a substantial burden on the exercise of religion led them to create the broader exemptions set forth in the New IFRs. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47800. But their view that the Accommodation Process imposes a substantial burden on the exercise of religion has been specifically rejected by the Third Circuit, which found exactly to the contrary in Geneva Coll. v. Sec'y U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 778 F.3d 422, 442 (3d Cir. 2015), vacated and remanded on other grounds sub nom. Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016).¹⁴ There, the Third Circuit decisively and clearly held that the Accommodation Process does not impose a "substantial burden" under RFRA. And, in Real Alternatives, it reaffirmed that the Accommodation Process does not impose a substantial burden on religious exercise. See 867 F.3d at 356 n.18 ("[W]e continue to believe . . . that the regulation at issue . . . did not impose a substantial burden."). Therefore, the Agency Defendants' interpretation of RFRA—that issuance of the Religious Exemption Rule is proper because the “substantial burden” that the Accommodation Process places on a person’s exercise of religion—is erroneous as a matter of law. See Williams v. Meltzler, 132 F.3d 937, 946 (3d Cir. 1997) (on questions of law, administrative judgment is subject to plenary judicial review).¹⁵

Defendants make much of having issued exemptions under prior regulations. For example, the Original Religious Exemption allowed churches and their integrated auxiliaries to opt out of the Contraceptive Mandate. However, the Supreme Court has held that exemptions like the one for churches and their integrated auxiliaries are required under RFRA and the First Amendment’s free exercise protections. See Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. at 2794 & n.14 (citing cases requiring exemptions for certain religious organizations). In Real Alternatives, the Third Circuit confirmed that the Original Religious Exemption was plainly required by federal and constitutional law in holding that exemptions and accommodations “may be extended to houses of worship and religious denominations without applying to all nonprofit entities in order to ‘alleviate significant governmental interference with the ability of religious organizations to define and carry out their religious missions.’” 867 F.3d at 352 (quoting Corp. of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327 (1987)). In contrast, the New IFRs are not required under RFRA because the Third Circuit—twice now—has foreclosed the Agencies’ legal conclusion that the Accommodation Process imposes a substantial burden.

For these reasons, the Commonwealth has shown a likelihood of success on the merits of its APA claim that the New IFRs are arbitrary, capricious, and contrary to established law.

b. Irreparable Harm

As explained earlier, the second factor to consider in deciding the Commonwealth’s motion is whether it has demonstrated that it is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of a preliminary injunction. “Issuing a preliminary injunction based only on a possibility of irreparable harm is inconsistent with the characterization of injunctive relief as ‘an extraordinary remedy’ that may be awarded only upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 21 & 22 (“Our frequently reiterated standard requires plaintiffs seeking preliminary relief to demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction.”).

The Commonwealth asserts that it will suffer two harms in the absence of an injunction: First, significant damage to the Commonwealth’s fiscal integrity; and second, harm to the health, safety, and wellness of the Commonwealth’s female residents.

The Commonwealth offered the testimony of Doctors Carol Weisman, Samantha Butts, and Cynthia Chuang, as well as several declarations and exhibits to support its allegation of irreparable harm. From this testimony and from other evidence and affidavits in the record, the Court finds that it is likely that the New IFRs will result in direct and irreparable harm to the Commonwealth’s fiscal integrity: The Commonwealth will become obligated to shoulder much of the burden of providing contraceptive services to those women who lose it because their health plans will opt out of coverage. See Steinberg Decl. ¶¶ 27-29; Medelsohn Decl. ¶ 15. Such women will seek contraceptive services elsewhere and, as Defendants noted in issuing the New IFRs, may turn to “multiple Federal, State, and local programs that provide free or subsidized contraceptives for low-income women” as alternative coverage. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47813, 47850. These programs in the Commonwealth include Medicaid, called “Medical Assistance,” which relies on funding from both the State and federal governments; Family Planning Services Program; and the Commonwealth’s network of clinics funded under the Title X grant program. See Allen Decl. ¶¶ 3-18; Steinberg Decl. ¶ 16. Indeed, Dr. Chuang testified that she counsels patients without coverage for contraceptive services to seek coverage from Medicaid. Tr. 177-78. As women in Pennsylvania lose contraceptive coverage through their health insurance plans and turn to State programs, it is likely that the Commonwealth will bear the added financial burden occasioned by the increase in women who need contraceptive care coverage. See Decl. of Seth A. Mendelsohn ¶ 15; Allen Decl. ¶ 23.

Of course, “loss of money” is generally insufficient to merit a preliminary injunction because “monetary damages . . . are capable of ascertainment and award at final judgment. . . .” Instant Air Freight Co. v. C.F. Air Freight, Inc., 882 F.2d 797, 801 (3d Cir. 1989). Here, however, the Commonwealth will not be able to recover any economic damages traceable to the implementation of the New IFRs. This is because a party—including the Commonwealth—may not seek monetary damages from the federal government. See 5 U.S.C. § 702 (providing that the federal government is immune from a suit for money damages). Therefore, if the New IFRs are ultimately struck down, the Commonwealth will be unable to recoup the money it expends on contraceptive care in the interim. In such circumstances, a preliminary injunction is appropriate. See, e.g., N.J. Retail Merchants, 669 F.3d at 388 (holding that a preliminary injunction is appropriate where a movant could not recover damages from a State due to sovereign immunity).

The Commonwealth’s harm is not merely speculative; it is actual and imminent. See Adams v. Freedom Forge Corp., 204 F.3d 475, 488 (3d Cir. 2000). The New IFRs estimate that at least 31,700 women will lose contraceptive coverage under the New Rules—and, as Plaintiff and amici persuasively argue, there are reasons to believe the number is significantly higher. See 82 Fed. Reg. 47,821. Thus, the only serious disagreement is not whether the Commonwealth will be harmed, but how much the Commonwealth will be harmed. Though Defendants argue that the Commonwealth has not identified any individual who has lost coverage already, there is no need to wait for the axe to fall before an injunction is appropriate, particularly where Defendants have estimated that it is about to fall on tens of thousands of women.¹⁶ And the financial burden is impending. The Commonwealth anticipates that on January 1, 2018, when open enrollment begins for health plans regulated by ERISA, some health plans will remove no-cost contraceptive services pursuant to the New IFRs, and it is likely that Pennsylvanian women will seek contraceptive services through services funded by the State fisc.

While the legal harm to the integrity of the State fisc is important to obtain a preliminary injunction, of parallel importance is the significant harm to the Commonwealth's interest in protecting the health, safety, and well-being of its citizens. See In re Oxycontin Antitrust Litig., 821 F. Supp. 2d 591, 601 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (citing Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 601-02). The potential harm faced by Pennsylvanian women and across the nation is enormous and irreversible. As employers take advantage of the New IFRs, access to no-cost contraceptive services for many women will be severely curtailed.

The Commonwealth's concern is that absent available cost-effective contraception, women will either forego contraception entirely or choose cheaper but less effective methods—individual choices which will result in an increase in unintended pregnancies. That, in turn, will inflict economic harm on the Commonwealth because unintended pregnancies are more likely to impose additional costs on Pennsylvania's State-funded health programs. See Steinberg Decl., ¶ 30 (discussing study finding that 68% of unplanned births are paid for by public insurance programs, compared to only 38% of planned births).

The record evidence in support of this position is compelling. Contraceptives are, without question, effective at preventing unintended pregnancies. See Institute Report at 106. Eighty five percent of women who do not use any form of contraceptive services and who do not want to become pregnant, become pregnant in one year. See id. Those women who do use contraception are far less likely to have an unplanned pregnancy. Id. But, even for those who do use contraception, there is some chance of an unplanned pregnancy higher or lower depending upon the chosen contraceptive method. For example, a pamphlet issued by the Centers for Disease Control entitled "Effectiveness of Family Planning Methods" shows there are 6 to 12 pregnancies per 100 women who are on the contraceptive pill in any given year. See Exh. 17. Yet, for those who have an Intrauterine Device ("IUD") implanted there is less than one pregnancy per 100 women per year. Id. Thus, it is clear that an IUD is more effective than the pill at preventing unintended pregnancy. A reasonable conclusion from that is women, all else being equal, would make the contraceptive choice of an IUD rather than the pill. But, three doctors testified that an IUD can be cost-prohibitive for many women because it has higher upfront costs than the contraceptive pill. Tr. 90; 132-33; 176-78. Dr. Butts testified that, prior to the implementation of the ACA's Contraceptive Mandate, it was common for her patients not to have prescribed IUDs implanted, but since the Contraceptive Mandate, use of IUDs has increased dramatically. Tr. 132; 153. She testified that after the Mandate went into effect, making no-cost contraception services available to all women, the number of her patients who declined an IUD dropped significantly. Id. Meanwhile, she recorded a five-fold increase in the number of IUDs she inserted in the course of her medical practice. Tr. 153.

Dr. Chuang and Dr. Weisman also testified about a study ("MyNewOptions Study") they and others conducted between 2014 and 2016 of more than 900 Pennsylvanian women who were actively avoiding pregnancy. Reviewing insurance claims data, they found that the number of women using IUDs and other implants—contraceptive methods that carry the highest up-front costs but are the most effective—doubled in two years after the Contraceptive Mandate took effect. Tr. 178-87. Meanwhile, the number of women who did not use contraceptive services decreased by roughly 50% in the two years following the Mandate's effect.¹⁷ Id. Doctors Chuang, Weisman, and Butts all attributed these changes to the effect of the Contraceptive Mandate, Tr. 90; 134; 187, and concluded that with the reduction in no-cost contraceptive insurance that will result from employer utilization of the New IFRs, more women will lose no-cost contraceptive coverage and the cost of their contraceptive services, to them, will rise. See Tr. 94. Thus, women will likely forgo contraceptive services or seek out less expensive and less effective types of contraceptive services in the absence of no-cost insurance coverage. See id.; Weisman Decl. ¶ 47; Chuang Decl. ¶¶ 36-39. Indeed, women cite cost as a significant factor in determining whether to purchase contraceptive services and which contraceptive services to use. See Adam Sonfield, What is at Stake with the Federal Contraceptive Coverage Guarantee? 20 Guttmacher Policy Review 8, 9 (2017).

The real life consequences, as amici point out, are significant: roughly 41% of unintended pregnancies in America are caused by inconsistent use of contraceptives.¹⁸ These problems are particularly acute in Pennsylvania, where the rate of unintended pregnancy is June 2017). Unlike the MyNewOptions Study presented by Plaintiff, the Guttmacher study used survey data, which is less reliable than the claims data used in the MyNewOptions study. And, unlike the MyNewOptions study, the Guttmacher study did not focus on Pennsylvania where the rate of unintended pregnancy is significantly greater than the national average, and which is the focus of the preliminary injunction.

¹⁸ The Contraceptive Mandate also affects women's health in other contexts as well. The Institute's Report, which recommended no-cost contraceptive coverage under the ACA, explained that contraceptive services are used to treat menstrual disorders, acne, hirsutism, and pelvic pain, in addition to assisting family planning and birth spacing. See Institute Report at 107. Contraceptive services

53%, significantly higher than the national average. Tr. 152. The negative effects of even a short period of decreased access to no-cost contraceptive services are irreversible.

c. Balance of the Equities

The third factor that the Commonwealth must show is that the balance of the equities tips in favor of granting a preliminary injunction. “Balancing the equities” is jurisprudential “jargon for choosing between conflicting public interests.” Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 609 (1943) (Frankfurter, J., concurring). Here, Congress has already struck the balance: Its passage of the Women’s Health Amendment was to bridge the significant gender gap in healthcare costs between men and women. Senator Feinstein explained that “[w]omen of childbearing age spend 68 percent more in out-of-pocket health care costs than men.” 155 Cong. Rec. 29302. And part of this problem stems from unintended pregnancies—an issue faced only by women. Senator Durbin explained that the purpose of the Women’s Health Amendment was to “expand health insurance coverage to the vast majority of [the 17 million women of reproductive age in the United States who are essential for women who face high-risk pregnancies or those for whom pregnancy may lead to significant complications. Even a short period of interrupted coverage will lead to irreparable harm because, as the Institute Report notes, women face severe complications, including death, from high-risk pregnancy. Dr. Butts also testified that decreased access to contraceptives will “increase pain and suffering for women who have [disorders such as pelvic pain and other medical conditions] . . . and to the extent that some of those unintended pregnancies are in women with very serious medical disorders for whom pregnancy may be contraindicated [it] can increase risks in a life-threatening way.” Tr. 140.

are uninsured and] . . . reduce unintended pregnancies.” Id. at 26768. Where, as here, “Congress itself has struck the balance, has defined the weight to be given the competing interests, a court of equity is not justified in ignoring that pronouncement under the guise of exercising equitable discretion.” Youngstown Sheet, 343 U.S. at 609-10.

Here, given the Commonwealth’s clear interest in securing the health and well-being of its women residents and containing its costs for contraceptive services, the balance of the equities heavily weighs in its favor. Defendants’ assertion that there is “inherent harm to an agency in preventing it from implementing regulations that Congress found to be in the public interest to direct that agency to develop” does not change that balance. Defendants will not be prejudiced by a preliminary injunction. If the New IFRs were issued in violation of applicable law, they will have suffered no harm. If Defendants ultimately prevail, then a preliminary injunction will have merely delayed their preferred regulatory outcome.

d. Public Interest

When considering the public interest, a court is limited to evaluating “how such interest and conveniences are affected by the selection of an injunction over other enforcement mechanisms.” United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers’ Co-op., 532 U.S. 483, 498 (2001). Here, a preliminary injunction is unquestionably in the public interest because it maintains the status quo pending the outcome of a trial on the merits. The New IFRs permit any entity to opt out of coverage within 30 to 60 days’ notice to plan members. A trial on the merits will not conclude in that short span. A preliminary injunction will maintain the status quo: those with exemptions or accommodations prior to October 6, 2017 will maintain their status, those with injunctions preventing enforcement of the Contraceptive Mandate will maintain their injunctions, but those with coverage will maintain their coverage as well.

IV. Conclusion

Plaintiff, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, has demonstrated that it has met all four factors necessary to obtain a preliminary injunction. In this case, the Commonwealth is likely to succeed on the merits of its two APA claims; the Commonwealth is likely to suffer serious and irreparable harm in the absence of a preliminary injunction; the balance of the equities tips in favor of granting an injunction, and the public interest favors granting it as well. After weighing these four factors, as stated above, the Court concludes that a preliminary injunction is warranted. The Commonwealth's Motion for Preliminary Injunction will be granted and Defendants shall be enjoined from enforcing the New IFRs.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 15th day of December, 2017, upon consideration of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's Motion for a Preliminary Injunction (ECF No. 9), Defendants' Response thereto (ECF No. 15), Plaintiff's Reply in Support thereof (ECF No. 30), the Administrative Record (ECF Nos. 23 & 47), Briefs of the Amici Curiae (ECF Nos. 34, 35 & 36), and following a Hearing on Plaintiff's Motion on December 14, 2017, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Motion is GRANTED.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants Eric D. Hargan, as Acting Secretary of the United States Department of Health and Human Services (substituted pursuant to Rule 25(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure); the United States Department of Health and Human Services; Steven T. Mnuchin, as Secretary of the United States Department of Treasury; the United States Department of Treasury, Rene Alexander Acosta, as Secretary of the United States Department of Labor; and the United States Department of Labor;¹ and their officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, designees, and subordinates, as well as any person acting in concert or participation with them, are hereby ENJOINED from enforcing the following Interim Final Rules pending further order of this Court:

1. Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act described at 82 Fed. Reg. 47792; and

The Court has considered the issue of security pursuant to Rule 65(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and determines that Defendants will not suffer any financial loss that warrants the need for the Plaintiff to post security. After considering the facts and circumstances of this case, the Court finds that security is unnecessary and exercises its discretion not to require the posting of security in this situation.

Plaintiffs, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey (collectively “the States”), have sued the United States of America, President Donald J. Trump, the United States Secretary of Health and Human Services Alex M. Azar II, the United States Secretary of the Treasury Steven T. Mnuchin, and the United States Secretary of Labor Rene Alexander Acosta in their official capacities, as well as each of their agencies (collectively “Defendants”), seeking to enjoin enforcement of two Final Rules that grant exemptions to the Affordable Care Act’s requirement that health plans cover women’s preventive services. The Final Rules “finalize” two Interim Final Rules, which Defendants issued in October 2017 and which this Court enjoined soon thereafter, see Pennsylvania v. Trump, 281 F. Supp. 3d 553, 585 (E.D. Pa. 2017). On November 15, 2018, while their appeal of that preliminary injunction was pending, Defendants promulgated the Final Rules currently before the Court. The States move to enjoin enforcement of the Final Rules arguing that, like the IFRs before them, the Final Rules violate a variety of constitutional and statutory provisions. For the reasons set forth below, Plaintiffs’ Second Motion for a Preliminary Injunction shall be granted.

I. Background¹

Although the relevant factual and procedural history of this dispute has been laid out at length before, see id. at 560-64, that background information is recounted here for the sake of clarity.

A. Contraceptive Mandate

In March 2010, Congress enacted the Affordable Care Act. See Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (“ACA”), Pub L. No. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119 (2010).

¹ The factual statements found here and elsewhere in the opinion constitute this Court’s findings of fact, as required under Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, regardless of any heading or lack thereof.

A provision of the ACA, the Women’s Health Amendment, mandated that insurance providers cover preventive health services and screenings for women without cost-sharing responsibilities. Specifically, the Women’s Health Amendment requires that “[a] group health plan and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements . . . with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration [“HRSA”] for purpose of this paragraph.” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(4). This requirement applies to all health insurers offering individual or group insurance, as well as all group health plans, with an exception for certain “grandfathered” plans. 42 U.S.C. § 18011 (exempting “grandfathered” plans); see also 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-1251 (2010).

Rather than enumerate the preventive services to be covered by the mandate, Congress delegated that decision to HRSA, which is an agency of Defendant Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”). HRSA, in turn, commissioned the then-named Institute of Medicine (“the Institute”), to convene a panel of experts to provide recommendations.² On July 19, 2011, the Institute issued its report, recommending that the ACA cover “the full range of Food and Drug Administration-approved contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling for women with reproductive capacity.” Institute of Medicine, Clinical Prevention Services for Women: Closing the Gaps, at 109-10 (2011).

On August 1, 2011, HRSA issued its preventive care guidelines (“2011 Guidelines”), which adopted the Institute’s recommendations. See HRSA, Women’s Preventive Services Guidelines, available at <https://www.hrsa.gov/womens-guidelines/index.html>.³ The 2011 Guidelines hewed to the Institute’s report, defining preventive care to include all FDA-approved “contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling.” Id. Under the Women’s Health Amendment, “non-grandfathered group health plans and health insurance issuers are required to provide coverage consistent with the HRSA Guidelines, without cost sharing.” Group Health Plans and Health Insurance Issuers Relating to Coverage of Preventive Services Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, 77 Fed. Reg. 8,725, 8,725 (Feb. 15, 2012). Thus these interlocking statutory and regulatory requirements created the so-called “Contraceptive Mandate.”

³ The Guidelines were updated in 2016 but continue to define “preventive services” to include contraceptive services and counseling. See Updating the HRSA-Supported Women’s Preventive Services Guidelines, 81 Fed. Reg. 95,148, 95,149 (Dec. 27, 2016).

B. Regulatory Action to Accommodate Religious Objections

At the same time, and based on “considerable feedback,” HHS, the Department of Labor, and the Department of the Treasury (collectively “the Agencies”) found it was “appropriate that HRSA, in issuing [the 2011] Guidelines, take[] into account the effect on the religious beliefs of certain religious employers if coverage of contraceptive services were required.” Group Health Plans and Health Insurance Issuers Relating to Coverage of Preventive Services Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, 76 Fed. Reg. 46,621, 46,623 (Aug. 3, 2011). The Agencies therefore provided HRSA with “additional discretion to exempt certain religious employers from the Guidelines where contraceptive services are concerned.” Id.

On August 1, 2011, the Agencies promulgated an interim final rule exempting certain religious employers from providing contraceptive services. Id. Under the exemption, a “religious employer” could be exempt from the Contraceptive Mandate only if it: (1) had the inculcation of religious values as its purpose; (2) primarily employed people who shared its religious tenets; (3) primarily served persons who shared its religious tenets; and (4) was a church, its integrated auxiliary, or a convention or association of a church exempt from taxation under the Internal Revenue Code. Id. On February 15, 2012, after considering more than 200,000 responses to this interim final rule, the Agencies issued a final rule adopting the “religious employer” definition. 77 Fed. Reg. at 8,725.

On March 21, 2012, the Agencies issued a notice of proposed rulemaking requesting comments on “alternative ways of providing contraceptive coverage without cost sharing in order to accommodate non-exempt, non-profit religious organizations with religious objections to such coverage.” Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 77 Fed. Reg. 16,501, 16,503 (March 21, 2012). After receiving and considering over 400,000 comments, the Agencies issued their final rule on July 2, 2013. Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 78 Fed. Reg. 39,870, 39,871 (July 2, 2013). The final rule had two noteworthy effects.

First, the rule “eliminate[ed] the first three prongs and clarif[ied] the fourth prong of the definition” of “religious employer” adopted in 2012. Id. at 39,874. Under the new definition, an entity qualified as a “religious employer” so long as it “is organized and operates as a nonprofit entity and is referred to in section 6033(a)(3)(A)(i) or (iii)” of the Internal Revenue Code, which applies to “churches, their integrated auxiliaries, and conventions or associations of churches, as well as to the exclusively religious activities of any religious order.” Id.

Second, the rule established an accommodation for “eligible organizations” with religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage. Id. The rule defined an “eligible organization” as one that: “(1) [o]pposes providing coverage for some or all of the contraceptive services required to be covered . . . ; (2) is organized and operates as a nonprofit entity; (3) holds itself out as a religious organization; and (4) self-certifies that it satisfies the first three criteria.” Id. An eligible organization was required to provide a copy of the self-certification to its insurance provider, which then would provide contraceptive coverage to the organization’s employees. Id. at 39,876. Thus an eligible organization that self-certified as such was “not required to contract, arrange, pay, or refer for contraceptive coverage,” but its “plan participants and beneficiaries [would] still benefit from separate payments for contraceptive services without cost sharing or other charge,” consistent with the Contraceptive Mandate. Id. at 39,874.

C. Hobby Lobby & Wheaton College

Meanwhile, a host of legal challenges to the Contraceptive Mandate progressed through the federal courts, several of which eventually reached the Supreme Court.

On June 30, 2014, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014). There, three closely-held corporations challenged the Contraceptive Mandate. Id. at 2765. The Supreme Court held that the application of the Contraceptive Mandate to the organizations violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (“RFRA”), because the Contraceptive Mandate imposed a substantial burden on the plaintiffs’ religious exercise and was not the “least restrictive means” of guaranteeing cost-free access to certain methods of contraception. 134 S. Ct. at 2780-82. The Supreme Court found the existence of the accommodation supported its conclusion that the Contraceptive Mandate was not the “least restrictive means”: “HHS itself has demonstrated that it has at its disposal an approach that is less restrictive than requiring employers to fund contraceptive methods that violate their religious beliefs. . . . HHS has already established an accommodation for nonprofit organizations with religious objections.” Id. at 2782. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court refrained from deciding “whether an approach of this type”—meaning the accommodation—“complies with RFRA for purposes of all religious claims.” Id.

A few days later, the Supreme Court issued an order in a related case, Wheaton College v. Burwell, 134 S. Ct. 2806 (2014) (per curiam). There, Wheaton College, an organization eligible for the accommodation, sought an injunction “on the theory that its filing of a self-certification form [would] make it complicit in the provision of contraceptives by triggering the obligation for someone else to provide the services to which it objects.” Id. at 2808 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting). The Supreme Court granted the injunction, permitting Wheaton College to “inform[] the Secretary of Health and Human Services in writing that it . . . has religious objections to providing coverage for contraceptive services”—that is, the college did not have to “use the [self-certification] form prescribed by the [g]overnment.” Id. at 2807 (per curiam). The Supreme Court warned, however, that the “order should not be construed as an expression of the Court’s views on the merits.” Id.

D. Regulatory Response to Hobby Lobby & Wheaton College

The Agencies responded to Hobby Lobby and Wheaton College by issuing a notice of proposed rulemaking “amend[ing] the definition of an eligible organization [for purposes of the accommodation] to include a closely held for-profit entity that has a religious objection to providing coverage for some or all of the contraceptive services otherwise required to be covered.” Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 79 Fed. Reg. 51,118, 51,121 (Aug. 27, 2014). Furthermore, the Agencies issued an interim final rule, effective immediately, that provided “an alternative process” for eligible organizations to self-certify “consistent with the Wheaton order.” Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 79 Fed. Reg. 51,092, 51,094-96 (Aug. 27, 2014). On July 14, 2015, the Agencies issued a rule that finalized the extended accommodation and alternative self-certification process. Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 80 Fed. Reg. 41,318, 41,323-24 (July 14, 2015).

E. Zubik Remand & Impasse

On May 16, 2016, the Supreme Court issued its third decision regarding the Contraceptive Mandate. In Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (per curiam), several organizations eligible for the accommodation challenged the self-certification process on the grounds that the requirement to submit a notice either to their insurer or the federal government violated RFRA. Id. at 1559. The Supreme Court declined to reach the merits of the dispute, requesting instead “supplemental briefing from the parties addressing ‘whether contraceptive coverage could be provided to petitioners’ employees, through petitioners’ insurance companies, without any such notice from petitioners.’” Id. at 1559-60. After the parties agreed that “such an option [was] feasible,” the Supreme Court remanded to afford them “an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward that accommodates petitioners’ religious exercise while at the same time ensuring that women covered by petitioners’ health plans receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.” Id. at 1560 (internal quotation marks omitted). Again, though, the Court “express[ed] no view on the merits of the cases,” and refrained from “decid[ing] whether petitioners’ religious exercise has been substantially burdened, whether the [g]overnment has a compelling interest, or whether the current regulations are the least restrictive means of serving that interest.” Id.

Following the remand the Agencies reached an impasse. After reviewing over 50,000 comments submitted in response to a request for information, the Agencies concluded that there was “no feasible approach . . . at this time that would resolve the concerns of religious objectors, while still ensuring that the affected women receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.” Dep’t of Labor, FAQs About Affordable Care Act Implementation Part 36, at 4 (2016), available at <https://www.dol.gov/sites/default/files/ebsa/about-ebsa/our-activities/resource-center/faqs/aca-part-36.pdf>.

F. 2017 IFRs & First Preliminary Injunction

On May 4, 2017, President Donald Trump issued an Executive Order entitled “Promoting Free Speech and Religious Liberty.” Exec. Order No. 13798, 82 Fed. Reg. 21,675 (May 4, 2017). The Order directed the Agencies to “consider issuing amended regulations, consistent with applicable law, to address conscience-based objections to the preventive-care mandate promulgated under [the Women’s Health Amendment].” Id. at § 3.

On October 6, 2017, aiming to be “[c]onsistent with the President’s Executive Order and the Government’s desire to resolve the pending litigation and prevent future litigation from similar plaintiffs,” Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 82 Fed. Reg. 47,792, 47,799 (Oct. 13, 2017), the Agencies issued two, new IFRs, referred to as the Religious Exemption IFR and the Moral Exemption IFR. See id. at 47,792 (“Religious Exemption IFR”); Moral Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 82 Fed. Reg. 47,838, 47,838 (Oct. 13, 2017) (“Moral Exemption IFR”) (collectively, “the IFRs”).

The IFRs made several significant changes to the prior exemption and accommodation framework.⁴ For one, the Moral Exemption IFR made the exemption available to “additional entities”—including for-profit entities that are not publicly traded—that object based on “sincerely held moral convictions,” without any need for the objection to be grounded in a religious objection to contraception. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,862 (emphasis added). Second, the Religious Exemption IFR significantly broadened the scope of the religious exemption to encompass any non-profit or for-profit entity, whether closely held or publicly traded. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,810. Third, the IFRs “likewise” expanded eligibility for the accommodation, allowing entities with sincerely held religious or moral convictions to take advantage of the accommodation process. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,813; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,849. Fourth, the IFRs made “the accommodation process optional for eligible organizations,” such that entities taking advantage of the accommodation would “not be required to comply with a self-certification process.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,808; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,850. Finally, the IFRs eliminated the requirement to provide notice of an intent to take advantage of the exemption or accommodation—entities that stop providing contraceptive care “do not need to file notices or certifications of their exemption.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,808; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,850. Thus the IFRs permit entities with religious or moral objections to forgo providing contraceptive coverage to employees without “fil[ing] notices or certifications of their exemption.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,838.⁵

⁴ The following is not an exhaustive list of the changes enacted by the IFRs, and subsequently the Final Rules. For example, the IFRs also changed the level at which exemptions are to be applied. So, whereas before the availability of an exemption was to be “determined on an employer by employer basis,” the IFRs provide that an exemption “will be determined on a plan basis.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,810. The effect of this change, according to the States, is that an employer may disregard the Contraceptive Mandate by adopting a group health plan “established or maintained” by an objecting organization, id., even if the employer itself does not hold a sincere religious or moral objection to contraception.

The IFRs became effectively immediately. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,815; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,855. Rather than engage in advance notice-and-comment procedures, the Agencies requested post-promulgation comments be submitted by December 5, 2017, 60 days after the IFRs went into effect. 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,792; 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,838. The Commonwealth filed suit in the interim seeking to enjoin enforcement of the IFRs, arguing:

⁵ The IFRs note that ERISA requires certain disclosures: “[u]nder ERISA, the plan document provides what benefits are provided to participants and beneficiaries under the plan and, therefore, if an objecting employer would like to exclude all or a subset of contraceptive services, it must ensure that the exclusion is clear in the plan document.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,838.

(1) they failed to comply with the notice-and-comment procedures required by the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 551, et seq.; (2) they are “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” in violation of the substantive provisions of the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A); (3) they violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2, et seq.; (4) they violate the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. V; and, (5) they violate the Establishment Clause, U.S. Const. amend. I.⁶ This Court granted the preliminary injunction, finding the Commonwealth was likely to succeed on its claims that the IFRs violated both the procedural and substantive strictures of the APA; it did not, however, reach the merits of the other statutory or constitutional claims. See Pennsylvania, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 585.⁷

⁶ The State of New Jersey was not party to the original Complaint, and thus, not a party to the first motion for a preliminary injunction either.

⁷ Following this Court’s issuance of a preliminary injunction, several other district courts issued decisions regarding the propriety of the IFRs. See California v. Health & Human Servs., 281 F. Supp. 3d 806, 832 (N.D. Cal. 2017) (enjoining the IFRs for violating the procedural requirements of the APA only), aff’d in part, vacated in part, remanded sub nom., California v. Azar, 911 F.3d 558, 566 (9th Cir. 2018) (upholding the lower court’s conclusion on the merits, but striking down the remedy as overbroad); Massachusetts v. Health & Human Servs., 301 F. Supp. 3d 248, 266 (D. Mass. 2018) (finding State lacked standing to challenge the IFRs), app. docketed, No. 18-1514 (1st Cir. June 6, 2018).

Defendants subsequently appealed the decision and moved to stay proceedings while the appeal was pending, which this Court granted.⁸

G. 2018 Final Rules & Second Motion for Preliminary Injunction

On November 15, 2018, while their appeal of the preliminary injunction was pending before the Third Circuit, the Agencies promulgated two new rules that “finalize[d]” the IFRs. Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,536, 57,536 (Nov. 15, 2018) (“Final Religious Exemption”); Moral Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,592, 57,592 (Nov. 15, 2018) (“Final Moral Exemption”). “In response to public comments,” the Agencies made “various changes” to the Final Rules “to clarify the intended scope of the language” in the IFRs. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,537; 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,593. The changes, however, were largely “non-substantial technical revisions.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,567. Defendants assert such changes “do not alter the fundamental substance of the exemptions set forth in the IFRs.” The Final Rules were scheduled to take effect on January 14, 2019. 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,567; 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,592.

The Commonwealth then sought to lift the stay to challenge the Final Rules. The Court granted the motion,⁹ and Pennsylvania—now joined by New Jersey—filed an Amended Complaint and a Second Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, seeking to enjoin enforcement of the Final Rules.¹⁰ The States argue the Final Rules: (1) failed to comply with the notice-and-comment procedures required by the APA; (2) are “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” in violation of the substantive provisions of the APA; (3) violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act; (4) violate the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment; and, (5) violate the Establishment Clause. It is to the merits of these contentions that the Court now turns.

¹⁰ The Third Circuit stayed Defendants’ appeal pending the resolution of the Second Motion for a Preliminary Injunction. Pennsylvania v. President United States of Am., No. 17-3752 (3d Cir. Jan. 9, 2019).

II. Analysis¹¹

A. Standing

A threshold question is whether the States have standing. Standing is a litigant’s ticket to federal court—a constitutional requirement that “limits the category of litigants empowered to maintain a lawsuit in federal court to seek redress for a legal wrong.” Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547 (2016). The States contend that they are properly before the Court because the Final Rules will imminently cause direct harm to their sovereign, quasi-sovereign and proprietary interests. Additionally, they assert that they have parens patriae standing to protect the health, safety and well-being of their residents in ensuring that they enjoy access to healthcare services. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the States have not suffered any legal wrong that would allow them to get through the turnstile into federal court.

“No principle is more fundamental to the judiciary’s proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies.” Simon v. E. Kentucky Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976). The doctrine of standing “is part of this limitation.” Id.; see also Finkleman v. Nat’l Football League, 810 F.3d 187, 203 (3d Cir. 2016). “[T]he irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three elements.” Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). First, a plaintiff must have suffered an “injury in fact,” which is “an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Second, a plaintiff must show that there is a “causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of”—that is, the injury must be “fairly traceable” to the “challenged action of the defendant.” Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). Third, a plaintiff must show that it is “likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Id. at 561 (internal quotation marks omitted).

As “[t]he party invoking federal jurisdiction,” the States “bear[] the burden of establishing these elements.” Id. And, “[s]ince they are not mere pleading requirements but rather an indispensable part of the plaintiff’s case, each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.” Id. “[A]t the preliminary injunction stage, allegations are”—without more—“not enough to support standing;” rather, the States must “adduce[] evidence demonstrating more than a mere possibility” that the elements of standing are met. Doe v. Nat’l Bd. of Med. Exam’rs, 199 F.3d 146, 152-53 (3d Cir. 1999).

1. Special Solitude

This standing inquiry must be made with recognition that States, like Pennsylvania and New Jersey here, “are not normal litigants for the purposes of invoking federal jurisdiction.” Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 518 (2007). They are “entitled to special solicitude in [the] standing analysis” if they have: (1) a procedural right that authorizes them to challenge the conduct at issue; and, (2) a “stake in protecting [their] quasi-sovereign interests.” Id. at 520; see also Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 151 (5th Cir. 2015), aff’d by an equally divided Court, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam).

In determining whether the States have met these conditions, both Massachusetts v. EPA and Texas v. United States are instructive. In Massachusetts v. EPA, Massachusetts sued the Environmental Protection Agency (“EPA”), alleging that the EPA had “abdicated its responsibility under the Clean Air Act” when it failed to issue regulations regarding the emission of certain greenhouse gases. 549 U.S. at 505. The EPA challenged Massachusetts’ standing to bring the suit, arguing greenhouse gas emissions are a widespread and generalized harm not unique to any specific plaintiff. Id. at 517. The Supreme Court nonetheless held that Massachusetts had special solicitude in the standing inquiry to challenge the EPA’s inaction: First, Massachusetts had a procedural right under the relevant statute, the Clean Air Act, which allowed it to “challenge agency action unlawfully withheld.” Id. (citing 42 U.S.C. § 7607(b)(1)). Second, Massachusetts had a quasi-sovereign interest—a “well-founded desire to preserve its sovereign territory” from the effects of global warming because Massachusetts “own[ed] a great deal of the territory alleged to be affected.” Id. at 519 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also id. at 522 (noting affidavits asserting that “rising seas have already begun to swallow Massachusetts’ coastal land.”). After concluding that Massachusetts was entitled to special solicitude in the standing analysis, the Supreme Court ultimately held that it had Article III standing to sue the EPA based on the injury to its territory stemming from global warming. Id. at 526.

In Texas v. United States, the Fifth Circuit, relying on Massachusetts v. EPA, similarly concluded that Texas and a multitude of other States were entitled to special solicitude in seeking to enjoin implementation of the Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents program (“DAPA”). 809 F.3d at 154-55. There, non-citizens in Texas could apply for a driver’s license if they presented “documentation issued by the appropriate United States agency that authorizes the applicant to be in the United States.” Id. at 155 (internal quotation marks omitted). DAPA would have permitted at least 500,000 non-citizens to qualify for these driver’s licenses. Id. Because Texas subsidized its licenses, it would have lost money for each license issued to a DAPA beneficiary. Id. Texas therefore sought injunctive relief to prevent DAPA’s implementation. See id. at 149.

The Fifth Circuit applied the Massachusetts v. EPA framework and concluded that Texas was entitled to special solicitude. First, the Fifth Circuit considered whether the States’ challenge was similar in kind to the challenge brought by Massachusetts, and concluded that it was. Both suits turned on the construction of a federal statute that specifically provided for a procedural right to judicial review, and Texas’ use of the APA to challenge an “affirmative decision” made by a federal agency was comparable to Massachusetts’ use of the judicial review provision in the Clean Air Act to challenge the EPA’s inaction. Id. at 152. Second, as to the quasi-sovereign interest, the Fifth Circuit held that DAPA imposed “substantial pressure” on Texas to change its laws to avoid bearing further costs from subsidizing additional driver’s licenses. Id. at 153. The Fifth Circuit thus concluded that Texas, and its fellow plaintiff States, warranted special solicitude in their suit against the federal government under the APA. Id. at 154-55.¹²

The Fifth Circuit’s reasoning in Texas v. United States is persuasive here. Here as there, the States bring suit under the APA to challenge an affirmative action by the federal government. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 152. And, the Final Rules—like DAPA—“affect[] the [S]tates’ ‘quasi-sovereign’ interest by imposing substantial pressure on them to change their laws.” Id. Specifically, they put pressure on provisions of the States’

¹² Defendants here question the binding effect of Texas v. United States beyond the facts of that case, given that the Supreme Court summarily affirmed the Fifth Circuit’s decision “by an equally divided Court.” United States v. Texas, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam). While an affirmance by an equally divided Supreme Court typically does not constitute binding precedent, see Eaton v. Price, 364 U.S. 263, 264 (1960), where the Supreme Court is equally divided on an issue of subject matter jurisdiction, it has determined that the proper course is to remand the issue of jurisdiction to a lower court. See Silliman v. Hudson River Bridge Co., 66 U.S. 582, 584-85 (1861). In other words, if the Supreme Court were equally divided on whether Texas had standing to challenge DAPA, it would have remanded that issue to the Fifth Circuit. The Supreme Court did not, and instead affirmed the Fifth Circuit, indicating that a majority of the Supreme Court decided that Texas had standing to pursue its APA claim. Certainly, if the Supreme Court had determined that Texas did not have standing, it would not have had jurisdiction to hear the case. Even if the affirmance by an equally divided Supreme Court as it relates to subject matter jurisdiction were not binding, the Court is persuaded by the reasoning of the Fifth Circuit in Texas v. United States as it pertains to State standing.

laws that provide state-funded contraceptive care to low-income citizens. As the States show, the Final Rules permit more employers to exempt themselves from the Contraceptive Mandate, which would result in more of the States' women seeking state-funded sources of contraceptive care. The harm to the States' fiscs are "intrusions . . . analogous to pressure to change the law," id., implicating the States' quasi-sovereign interests. See also Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 607 (1982) (holding that a State has a "quasi-sovereign interest in the health and wellbeing—both physical and economic—of its residents in general."). The States, then, meet the two conditions outlined in Massachusetts v. EPA and shall be accorded special solicitude in the standing analysis.

2. Article III Standing

While the States are entitled to special solicitude in the standing analysis, they must nevertheless meet the "irreducible constitutional minimum of standing"—namely, injury in fact, causation, and redressability. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560. In its initial challenge to the IFRs, the Commonwealth satisfied this burden, see Pennsylvania, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 569, and the same is true of the States' challenge to the Final Rules. See also California, 911 F.3d at 571 (finding another group of States had standing to challenge the IFRs).

First, the Final Rules inflict a direct injury upon the States by imposing substantial financial burdens on their coffers. An agency rule that has "a major effect on the states' fiscs" is sufficient to find injury in fact. Texas, 809 F.3d at 152; id. at 155 ("[Texas] satisfied the first standing requirement by demonstrating that it would incur significant costs in issuing driver's licenses to DAPA beneficiaries.”); see also Wyoming v. Oklahoma, 502 U.S. 437, 448 (1992) (holding that Wyoming had Article III standing because it undisputedly suffered a “direct injury in the form of a loss of specific tax revenues”); Danvers Motor Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 432 F.3d 286, 291 (3d Cir. 2005) (“While it is difficult to reduce injury-in-fact to a simple formula, economic injury is one of its paradigmatic forms.”). If the Final Rules go into effect, the States will have to increase their expenditures for State funded programs that provide contraceptive services. This is not a speculative harm. As Defendants themselves noted in issuing the IFRs, “there are multiple Federal, State, and local programs that provide free or subsidized contraceptives for low-income women.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,803. As more of the States’ women residents are deprived of contraceptive services through their insurance plans and turn to these State funded programs, the States will be pressed to make greater expenditures to ensure adequate contraceptive care. See Mendelsohn Decl. ¶ 15; Steinberg Decl. ¶¶ 24-25. And although Defendants point out that the States have not yet identified a woman resident who has lost contraceptive coverage due to the Final Rules, the States need not sit idly by and wait for fiscal harm to befall them. See McNair v. Synapse Group Inc., 672 F.3d 213, 223 (3d Cir. 2012) (“When, as in this case, prospective relief is sought, the plaintiff must show that he is ‘likely to suffer future injury’ from the defendant’s conduct.”) (quoting City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 105 (1983) (emphasis added)). At bottom, just as Texas’ estimated loss due to DAPA supported a finding that Texas suffered an injury in fact, so too does the States’ estimated loss due to the Final

Rules support a finding that the States have suffered an injury in fact. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 155.

Second, the States' financial injury is "fairly traceable" to the issuance of the Final Rules. By their terms, the Final Rules expand the scope of the existing religious exemption rule and allow entities a new rationale for refusing to provide employees with contraceptive coverage if the refusal is "based on sincerely held moral convictions," 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,593. Thus, the Final Rules allow more entities to stop providing contraceptive coverage, which will result in more women residents seeking contraceptive care through State-funded programs. See Mendelsohn Decl. ¶ 15; Steinberg Decl. ¶¶ 24-25. The States have thus shown a causal connection between the Final Rules and their financial injury.

As the Court previously explained, Pennsylvania v. New Jersey, 426 U.S. 660 (1976), is not to the contrary. See also California, 911 F.3d at 574 (finding Pennsylvania did not bar States' challenge to the IFRs on a similar theory of standing). In that case, Pennsylvania voluntarily gave tax credits to Pennsylvania residents who paid taxes in New Jersey, and then proceeded to sue New Jersey, contending that the New Jersey tax injured Pennsylvania's fiscs and was constitutionally impermissible. Pennsylvania, 426 U.S. at 662-63. The Supreme Court found that Pennsylvania lacked standing because the injuries to its fiscs were "self-inflicted," resulting, as they did, from a decision of its state legislature to enact a law that incorporated the legislative choices of New Jersey. Id. at 664. Here, by contrast, the States' laws funding contraceptive care do not "directly and explicitly" tie the States' finances to another sovereign's law. California, 911 F.3d at 574. Rather, the States’ described injuries flow from the unilateral decision by the Agencies to issue the Final Rules. See id. (finding Pennsylvania did control in an analogous challenge); cf. Texas, 809 F.3d at 158 (“The fact that Texas sued in response to a significant change in the [federal government’s] policies shows that its injury is not self-inflicted.”). The States have therefore met the traceability requirement.

Finally, the States have satisfied the redressability requirement. As to the States’ procedural claims, enjoining the Final Rules could prompt the Agencies “to reconsider the program, which is all a plaintiff must show when asserting a procedural right.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 161; see also Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 518 (noting that where, as here, a litigant is “vested with a procedural right, that litigant has standing if there is some possibility that the requested relief will prompt the injury-causing party to reconsider the decision that allegedly harmed the litigant”). And, as for the States’ substantive claims, enjoining the Final Rules “would prevent [the States’] injury altogether.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 161.

In sum, the States have established the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing to challenges the Final Rules in federal court.¹³

¹³ Because the States have identified an imminent, direct injury to its state coffers that would result from the Final Rules, there is no need to address whether they have parens patriae standing.

B. Venue

The next question to address is whether the States' choice of venue—the Eastern District of Pennsylvania—is proper. Notwithstanding Defendants' argument to the contrary, it is.

Defendants' argument is grounded in the structure of the venue statute, Section 1391(e)(1) of which provides that in a civil action against an officer of the United States, venue lies “in any judicial district in which . . . the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved in the action.” 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1). Section 1391(c) defines a party's residence “[f]or all venue purposes,” and distinguishes between three, and only three, categories of litigants: “a natural person,” “an entity with the capacity to sue and be sued in its common name under applicable law, whether or not incorporated,” and “a defendant not resident in the United States.” Id. at § 1391(c). Because Pennsylvania is neither a natural person nor a non-resident, Defendants argue it must be treated as an entity for purposes of determining residency. Section 1391(c)(2) provides that “if a plaintiff,” an entity “shall be deemed to reside . . . only in the judicial district in which it maintains its principal place of business.” Id. Thus, according to Defendants, Pennsylvania resides only in the Middle District—the district that encompasses Harrisburg, the state capital—because that is where Pennsylvania maintains its principal place of business.

While inventive, Defendants' interpretation of Section 1391(c) is ultimately unpersuasive. See California, 911 F.3d at 570 (rejecting the argument); Alabama v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 382 F. Supp. 2d 1301, 1328 (N.D. Ala. 2005) (rejecting a similar argument for an earlier version of the venue statute). Defendants' argument hinges on the assumption that, because Section 1391(c) refers to only three categories of litigants and because a state is neither a natural person nor a non-resident, a state must necessarily be "an entity" for purposes of the venue statute. There are, however, several issues with that assumption.

First, the statute explicitly refers to an entity's incorporation status, indicating "that the term [entity] refers to some organization, not a state." California, 911 F.3d at 570. The legislative history confirms that Congress was contemplating "unincorporated associations, such as partnerships and labor unions, and other entities with capacity to sue in their common name," when it defined the residency of unincorporated entities in Section 1391(c). H.R. Rep. No. 112-10, at 21 (2011). There is no indication, however, that Congress intended for that provision to dictate the residency of sovereign States by equating a State with an "unincorporated association[]" like a labor union.

Second, Congress explicitly distinguishes between States and entities within Section 1391. Compare 28 U.S.C. § 1391(c) (defining the residency of an "entity"), with id. at § 1391(d) ("Residency of corporations in States with multiple districts"). "Where Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Russello v. United States, 464 U.S. 16, 23 (1983) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Thus, courts typically "refrain from concluding . . . that the differing language in [] two subsections [of a statute] has the same meaning in each.” Id. Here, Congress’s differentiation between “an entity” and “States” within Section 1391 indicates that Congress did not intend to include the latter within the definition of the former.

Finally, reading Section 1391 as Defendants suggest would yield an absurd result. As several courts have observed, an interpretation that “limit[s] residency to a single district in the state would defy common sense,” because “[a] state is ubiquitous throughout its sovereign borders.” California, 911 F.3d at 570; Alabama, 382 F. Supp. 2d at 1329 (“[C]ommon sense dictates that a state resides throughout its sovereign borders”).¹⁴

Thus, the Court will follow the lead of the Ninth Circuit in concluding that “the statute . . . dictates that a state with multiple judicial districts ‘resides’ in every district within its borders.” California, 911 F.3d at 570. Venue is therefore proper in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.¹⁵

Relatedly, New Jersey’s residency does not bear on the question of because “in an action against the federal government or an agent thereof [t]here is no requirement that all plaintiffs reside in

C. Preliminary Injunction

Because the States have established standing to bring their claims into federal court and that this is a proper venue to hear those claims, the Court now turns to the merits of the preliminary injunction motion.

1. Legal Standard

A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy; it “should be granted only in limited circumstances.” American Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Winback & Conserve Program, Inc., 42 F.3d 1421, 1426-27 (3d Cir. 1994). “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Winter v. NRDC, 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). The first two are the “most critical factors: [a movant] must demonstrate that it can win on the merits (which requires a showing significantly better than negligible but not necessarily more likely than not) and that it is more likely than not to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief.” Reilly v. City of Harrisburg, 858 F.3d 173, 179 (3d Cir. 2017), as amended (June 26, 2017) (internal quotation marks omitted). “If these gateway factors are met, a court then considers the remaining two factors and determines in its sound discretion if all four factors, taken together, balance in favor of granting the requested preliminary relief.” Id.

the forum district.” Exxon Corp. v. FTC, 588 F.2d 895, 899-90 (3d Cir. 1978); Superior Oil Co. v. Andrus, 656 F.2d 33, 37 n.7 (3d Cir. 1981) (“[O]nly one plaintiff need satisfy the residency requirement of [Section 1391(e)].”).

2. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

In demonstrating the likelihood of success on the merits, a plaintiff need not show that it is more likely than not that it will succeed. Singer Mgmt. Consultants, Inc. v. Milgram, 650 F.3d 223, 229 (3d Cir. 2011) (en banc). Instead, all a plaintiff must show is “a likelihood of success on the merits (that is, a reasonable chance, or probability, of winning) to be granted relief.” Id. (emphasis in original).

a. APA Procedural Claim

The States argue that the Final Rules should be enjoined because Defendants failed to comply with the procedural requirements of the APA.

The APA generally requires that, when promulgating regulations, administrative agencies meet a set of procedural requirements, called notice-and-comment rulemaking. See 5 U.S.C. § 553. Agencies must: issue a general notice of proposed rulemaking, see id. at § 553(b); “give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views or arguments . . . ” id. at § 553(c); and, “[a]fter consideration of the relevant matter presented, . . . incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and purpose,” id.

Notice-and-comment rulemaking serves two distinct purposes—it both “give[s] the public an opportunity to participate in the rule-making process,” and “enables the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those regulated.” Texaco, Inc. v. Fed. Power Comm’n, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3d Cir. 1969).

Nevertheless, there are limited exceptions to the requirement that all rules be issued pursuant to notice-and-comment rulemaking, such as when an agency has “good cause” to forgo the strictures of notice-and-comment rulemaking, 5 U.S.C. § 553(b), or when a subsequent act of Congress abrogates the APA’s procedural requirements, id. at § 559.

In issuing the IFRs, the Agencies failed to meet the various requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking. See Pennsylvania, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 570. Defendants argued, however, that the IFRs were not procedurally invalid because they fell under one (or more) of the limited exceptions to notice-and-comment rulemaking. Id. at 571. The Court found otherwise and enjoined the IFRs for violating the procedural strictures of Section 553. Id. at 576; see also California, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 829 (enjoining the IFRs for violating the procedural requirements of the APA), aff’d in part, vacated in part, California, 911 F.3d at 575 (upholding the conclusion that the IFRs violated the APA).

While Defendants continue to maintain that the IFRs were procedurally valid,¹⁶ they now argue that, even assuming the IFRs were procedurally improper, the subsequent action taken by the Agencies in promulgating the Final Rules satisfied notice-and-comment requirements, and thus the Final Rules comply with the

APA. The States’ response is two-fold. First, they argue that the Agencies notice-and-comment procedures fell short of the APA’s requirements because the Agencies did not adequately respond to significant comments in their statement of the basis and purpose of the Final Rules. Second, the States contend that, no matter the Agencies’ subsequent actions, the procedural defects that characterized the issuance of the IFRs fatally taint the Final Rules. These arguments are considered seriatim.

i. Inadequate Response to Comments

The States argue that the Agencies’ issuance of the Final Rules failed to meet the requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking by not responding to all “vital questions[] raised by comments which are of cogent materiality.” United States v. Nova Scotia Food Prod. Corp., 568 F.2d 240, 252 (2d Cir. 1977). The APA requires federal agencies to “consider and respond to significant comments received during the period for public comment.” Perez v. Mortg. Bankers Ass’n, 135 S. Ct. 1199, 1203 (2015). The requirement, however, is not “particularly demanding.” Nazareth Hosp. v. Sec’y U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 747 F.3d 172, 185 (3d Cir. 2014) (quoting Pub. Citizen, Inc. v. FAA, 988 F.2d 186, 197 (D.C. Cir. 1993)). All that is required is a response that “‘demonstrates that the [agency] considered and rejected’ the arguments.” Id. (quoting Covad Commc’ns Co. v. FCC, 450 F.3d 528, 550 (D.C. Cir. 2006)).

The States contend that the Agencies failed to clear this relatively low bar, pointing to several examples of comments that purportedly received an inadequate response: comments that discuss the scientific evidence of the harm to the health and economic security of women that would result from the Final Rules, 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,555-56; comments that assert the broad religious and moral exemptions will cause women to lose contraceptive coverage, id. at 57,548-49; comments that argue the exemptions violate the ACA prohibition on regulations that create barriers to medical care, id. at 57,551-52; and, specifically, a comment submitted by various States—including Pennsylvania and New Jersey—regarding the medical risks associated with pregnancy, id. at 57,555.

For each example, however, a review of the Final Rules demonstrates that the Agencies acknowledged the comments and provided an explanation as to why the Agencies did (or did not) amend the Final Rules based on the comment. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,548, 57,551, 57,555. While the Agencies’ explanations are not always the picture of clarity, they meet the not “particularly demanding” requirement, Nazareth Hosp., 747 F.3d at 185, that the Agencies “consider and respond to significant comments received during the period for public comment,” Perez, 135 S. Ct. at 1203. Put differently, the Final Rules “demonstrate [to a commenter] that the [the Agencies] considered and rejected, the arguments” put forth by a commenter, which is “all that the [APA] requires.” Nazareth Hosp., 747 F.3d at 185 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Thus, the States are unlikely to succeed on the merits of their argument that, in promulgating the Final Rules, the Agencies' actions failed to meet the requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking.¹⁷

ii. IFRs Taint the Final Rules

The States maintain that, even if the Agencies complied with the requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking in promulgating the Final Rules, the failure to do so in promulgating the IFRs fatally infected the process such that the Final Rules should also be held invalid.

Generally, “the period for comments after promulgation cannot substitute for the prior notice and comment required by the APA.” Sharon Steel Corp. v. EPA, 597 F.2d 377, 381 (3d Cir. 1979). The Circuit courts however, diverge on the procedural validity of a final rule that follows an IFR promulgated in a procedurally flawed manner—that is, the question of whether a “procedural defect that taints the original, interim-final rule carr[ies] over to the succeeding final rule.” Kristin E. Hickman & Mark Thomson, Open Minds and Harmless Errors: Judicial Review of Postpromulgation Notice and Comment, 101 Cornell L. Rev. 261, 267 (2016) (discussing various approaches taken by the Circuit courts); compare Salman Ranch, Ltd. v. Comm’r, 647 F.3d 929, 940 (10th Cir. 2011) (“While the . . . temporary regulations were issued without notice and comment, now that the regulations have issued in final form [after notice and comment], these arguments are moot . . .”) (internal quotation marks omitted), rev’d on other grounds, Salman Ranch, Ltd. v. Comm'r, 566 U.S. 971 (2012), with Air Transp. Ass'n of Am. v. Dep't of Transp., 900 F.2d 369, 379 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (“Although we have suggested that there might be circumstances in which ‘defects in an original notice [could] be cured by an adequate later notice’ and opportunity to comment, we have emphasized that we could reach such a conclusion only upon a compelling showing that ‘the agency’s mind remain[ed] open enough at the later stage.’ . . . The FAA has not come close to overcoming the presumption of closed-mindedness in this case.”) (quoting McLouth Steel Prods. Corp. v. Thomas, 838 F.2d 1317, 1323 (D.C. Cir. 1988)), vacated on other grounds, 498 U.S. 1077 (1991). For its part, the Third Circuit has evidenced a deep skepticism towards the curative powers of post-promulgation notice-and-comment procedures, see NRDC v. EPA, 683 F.2d 752, 767-68 (3d Cir. 1982); United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498, 519 (3d Cir. 2013); accord Sharon Steel. Corp., 597 F.2d at 381, which warrants a conclusion that the States are likely to succeed on the claim that the procedural faults that characterized the issuance of the IFRs fatally tainted the Final Rules such that the issuance of the Final Rules violated the APA.

The Third Circuits’ decision most directly on point is NRDC v. EPA. There, the NRDC challenged EPA action that indefinitely postponed the effective date of certain Clean Water Act amendments. NRDC, 683 F.2d at 757. The EPA did not engage in notice-and-comment procedures before acting to postpone the implementation of the amendments.¹⁸ Id. at 756. After NRDC initiated litigation challenging the agency's action, the EPA issued a notice of proposed rulemaking, seeking comments on whether the agency should issue a rule further postponing the effective date. Id. at 757. After going through notice-and-comment procedures, the EPA then issued a final rule implementing some of the amendments, while further postponing the most controversial bits. Id. Nevertheless, NRDC maintained its challenge to the EPA's initial action to postpone the effective date. The Third Circuit rejected the EPA's argument that its notice-and-comment procedures after the initial action to postpone "cured" any failure to engage in such procedures before the initial action, and held the initial action postponing the effective date was procedurally invalid. Id. at 767.

Critical to this dispute, however, the Third Circuit further held that, even though the NRDC did not challenge the final rule—that is, the rule promulgated following notice-and-comment procedures—the final rule "was likewise invalid." Id. at 768. The court of appeals explained that the appropriate remedy for the EPA's failure to engage in notice-and-comment rulemaking before taking its initial action required holding both the initial action and the subsequent, final rule "ineffective." Id. at 767. EPA's notice-and-comment procedures

“could not serve as the procedural mechanism” for the final rule because “that rulemaking [could not] replace one on the question of whether the amendments should be postponed in the first place.” Id. That is, if the EPA had engaged in notice-and-comment procedures before initially acting to postpone the effective date, then “the question to be decided in the [subsequent] rulemaking”—the rulemaking that complied with notice-and-comment procedures—“would have been whether the amendments . . . should be suspended, and not whether they should be further postponed.” Id. The Third Circuit warned that:

To allow the APA procedures in connection with the further postponement to substitute for APA procedures in connection with an initial postponement would allow EPA to substitute post-promulgation notice and comment procedures for pre-promulgation notice and comment procedures at any time by taking an action without complying with the APA, and then establishing a notice and comment procedure on the question of whether that action should be continued. . . . We cannot countenance such a result.

Id.

That reasoning applies with equal force here. The Agencies issued the IFRs without engaging in notice-and-comment rulemaking. As in NRDC, the issuance of the procedurally defective IFRs fundamentally changed the “question to be decided in the [subsequent] rulemaking”—instead of asking whether substantial expansions to the exemption and accommodation should be made at all, the Agencies solicited comments on whether those changes should be finalized. Thus, the subsequent “rulemaking on [finalizing the IFRs] could not serve as the procedural mechanism,” for the Final Rules because “that rulemaking [could not] replace one on the question of whether” the Agencies should broaden the existing exemption and accommodation “in the first place.” Id. The Agencies are, in essence, engaging in precisely the behavior that the Third Circuit warned against in NRDC: “substitute[ing] post-promulgation notice and comment procedures for pre-promulgation notice and comment procedures . . . by taking an action without complying with the APA, and then establishing a notice and comment procedure on the question of whether that action should be continued.” Id. The Court, like the Third Circuit, “cannot countenance such a result.” Id.

Defendants and Defendant-Intervenor advance several arguments to the contrary, none of which are ultimately persuasive. For one, Defendants argue that NRDC is not on all fours with this case and so “provides no support for the Plaintiffs’ procedural challenge.” Defendants are correct that NRDC differs factually from the case at hand: there the NRDC challenged only the initial action, here the States challenged both the IFRs and the Final Rules. But, even though the plaintiff did not challenge the final rule in NRDC, the Third Circuit held both the initial action to postpone and the subsequent rule procedurally invalid. In reaching that determination, the Third Circuit rejected the notion—advanced by the Agencies here—that subsequent notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures “cured” the failure to engage in such procedures “in the first place.” Id. at 767-78. Both the holding and the reasoning given for that holding are binding on this Court. See Tate v. Showboat Marina Casino P’ship, 431 F.3d 580, 582 (7th Cir. 2005) (Posner, J.) (“[T]he holding of a case includes, besides the fact and the outcome, the reasoning essential to that outcome.”); see also IFC Interconsult, AG v. Safeguard Int’l Partners, LLC, 438 F.3d 298, 311 (3d Cir. 2006) (quoting Judge Posner’s definition approvingly). Because the Third Circuit’s reasoning invalidating the subsequent rule was essential to the holding, and because that reasoning applies with equal force to the promulgation of the Final Rules, that reasoning controls here.

Next, Defendants argue that the States suffered no procedural injury because they had an opportunity to submit a comment in response to the IFRs, an opportunity that the States “admit” to taking advantage of. The problem for Defendants is that the EPA made the exact argument to the Third Circuit in NRDC, which the court of appeals flatly rejected. NRDC, 683 F.2d at 768. As the Third Circuit explained, it did not matter that “notice and comment were provided in connection with the proposal that the amendments be further postponed, and NRDC was able to make all of the arguments in connection with the further postponement that NRDC would have made in connection with the initial postponement.” Id. The problem was that the initial, procedurally defective action fundamentally changed the question to be presented in the subsequent rulemaking, prejudicing NRDC, which ““must come hat-in-hand and run the risk that the decisionmaker is likely to resist change.”” Id. at 768 (quoting Sharon Steel, 597 F.2d at 381). Here, the procedurally invalid IFRs similarly changed the question to be presented in the subsequent rulemaking, prejudicing the States’ ability to have their comments heard by an impartial decisionmaker. Cf. Wagner Elec. Corp. v. Volpe, 466 F.2d 1013, 1020 (3d Cir.

1972) (“Section [553(b)] of the [APA] requires notice before rulemaking, not after. The right of interested persons to petition for the issuance, amendment or repeal of a rule, granted in [5 U.S.C. § 553(e)], is neither a substitute for nor an alternative to compliance with the mandatory notice requirements of [5 U.S.C. § 553(b)].”) (emphasis in original).

Defendant-Intervenor’s attempt to distinguish away the reasoning of NRDC fares no better. It argues the court of appeals’ reasoning does not control because, while “unique circumstances” existed in NRDC “to establish prejudice,” no such circumstances are present here. Specifically, Defendant-Intervenor argues that the Third Circuit invalidated the final rule in NRDC because of the “asymmetry between using an interim rule to repeal a rule promulgated with prior notice and comment,” whereas, here, the Final Rules are not “an abrupt change in federal policy” because the Final Rules do not rescind the Contraceptive Mandate. According to Defendant-Intervenor, that makes this case “readily distinguishable from NRDC.”

The argument is premised on a misreading of NRDC. The Third Circuit did not invalidate the EPA action because of the degree of change affected by the procedurally invalid action. Rather, it held that the subsequent notice-and-comment rulemaking “[could not] replace [a rulemaking] on the question of whether the amendments should be postponed in the first place.” NRDC, 683 F.2d at 768. More fundamentally, the court of appeals did not rest its decision on the existence of any “unique circumstances,” as Defendant-Intervenor suggests. Instead, the Third Circuit voiced a general admonition against the practice of using post-promulgation procedures to cure pre-promulgation procedural flaws. Id. As discussed, the reasoning underpinning that warning informs the result here.

Defendant-Intervenor also advances an altogether different argument. It points out that the Agencies “created the [Contraceptive] Mandate via a series of IFRs without notice and comment,” suggesting that the Final Rules are procedurally valid because the Agencies followed similar procedures in the past. The Court rejected a version of this argument last go around. See Pennsylvania, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 573 n.8. Whether a party could have brought a successful challenge to the procedures followed in the past is not before the Court—what is at issue here is whether the procedures the Agencies followed in issuing the Final Rules violated the APA. Id. (explaining that the IFRs were “not identical to prior regulations” because “they make significant changes in the law, and the Supreme Court did not require immediate action”). The same flawed reasoning characterizes Defendant-Intervenor’s related argument that invalidating the Final Rules would “cast a pall on thousands of regulations,” because, according to the Government Accountability Office, 35% of all major rules were finalized with post-IFR notice-and-comment procedures. Obviously, those regulations are not currently before this Court, and, accordingly, the Court is not asked—and thus, cannot decide—whether the specific procedures employed in promulgating those regulations were defective.

The States are likely to prevail on their claim that the issuance of the Final Rules violated the procedural requirements of the APA in that the procedural defect that characterized the IFRs fatally tainted the issuance of the Final Rules. That is so, regardless of whether the procedure followed by the Agencies in the Final Rules may otherwise meet the requirements of notice-and-comment rulemaking.¹⁹

Even under the more flexible “open mind standard,” however, the States would likely succeed on the merits of their procedural claim. As the D.C. Circuit has explained, while “defects in an original notice could be cured by an adequate later notice and opportunity to comment,” the remedial measures cure the earlier lapses only if the promulgating agency makes “a compelling showing that the agency’s mind remained open enough at the later stage.” Air Transp. Ass’n of Am., 900 F.2d at 379 (internal quotation marks omitted). That is, “it is the agency’s burden to persuade the court that it has accorded the comments a full and fair hearing.” Advocates for Highway & Auto Safety v. Fed. Highway Admin., 28 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C. Cir. 1994). Courts that use this approach have established that an agency can demonstrate open-mindedness by making changes to a final rule in response to public comments, or giving careful consideration to comments submitted in response to a proposed rule. Air Transp. Ass’n of Am., 900 F.2d at 380; see also Advocates for Highway & Auto Safety, 28 F.3d at 1292.

Here, the Agencies have not made a “compelling showing” that they kept an open mind at the later stages of the rulemaking process. Most notably, while the Agencies made some changes to the Final Rules based on public comments, those rules were largely “non-

b. APA Substantive Claim

The States also contend that the Final Rules violate the substantive requirements of the APA. As the Court has previously noted, the breadth of the exemptions set out in the IFRs, and now the Final Rules, is remarkable. The Final Religious Exemption allows all non-profit and for-profit entities, whether closely held or publicly traded, to deny contraceptive coverage based on sincerely held religious beliefs. The Final Moral Exemption allows any non-profit or for-profit organization that is not publicly traded to deny contraceptive coverage for its employees for any sincerely held moral conviction.

The APA's substantive requirements command that an administrative rule must be set aside if it is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law," or "in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A), (C). "It is well settled that an agency may only act within the authority granted to it by statute." NRDC v. Nat'l Highway Traffic Safety Admin., 894 F.3d 95, 108 (2d Cir. 2018). Because "administrative agencies may act only pursuant to authority delegated to them by Congress," an agency substantial technical revisions," 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,567, that Defendants concede "do not alter the fundamental substance of the exemptions set forth in the IFRs." Indeed, the Final Rules and the preambles that accompany them "demonstrate[] a single-minded commitment to the substantive result reached," Reynolds, 710 F.3d at 519—to wit, expanding the exemption and accommodation. Because the Agencies' actions indicate closed-mindedness on "the very subject matter about which [they] w[ere] to keep an 'open mind,'" id., the States would likely prevail on their procedural claim even under the more lenient open mind standard.

must “point to something” in a statute that “gives it the authority” to take the specific action at issue. Clean Air Council v. Pruitt, 862 F.3d 1, 9 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Defendants cite two potential fonts of statutory authority to issue the Final Rules. First, they assert that the ACA includes a broad delegation of authority to the Agencies, permitting them to issue the Final Rules. Second, with specific regard to the Religious Exemption, Defendants assert that RFRA not only authorizes the Agencies to create a religious exemption to the Contraceptive Mandate, but in fact requires that the Agencies issue the broad exemption contained within the Final Religious Exemption.

As explained below, both arguments fail. The Final Rules—just as the IFRs before them—exceed the scope of the Agencies’ authority under the ACA, and, further, cannot be justified under RFRA. As a result, the Final Rules must be set aside.²⁰

i. The ACA

To reiterate for purposes of clarity, the ACA requires that group health plans and insurance issuers “shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements for— . . . with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA].” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a). It is uncontroverted here that, pursuant to this provision, HRSA has—and by extension the Agencies have—the delegated authority to define what “preventive care” is; that in 2011, HRSA issued guidelines defining “preventive care” to include contraceptives; and that the Final Rules do not purport to remove contraceptives from the coverage mandate. 83 Fed Reg. at 57,537. In light of these provisions, what must be provided under the ACA’s “preventive care” requirement is clear—all FDA-approved “contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling,” 77 Fed. Reg. at 8,725—as is who must provide it—any “group health plan” or “health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage,” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a).

The Agencies, however, contend that the authority to define what preventive care will be covered includes a congressional delegation of authority to carve out exceptions to who must provide preventive coverage. More specifically, Defendants argue that the Women’s Health Amendment necessarily grants them the authority to exempt employers and healthcare plan sponsors from the coverage requirement, based on religious or moral objections to the Mandate. Thus, the precise question at issue is whether the ACA permits the Agencies to develop the exemptions set forth in the Final Rules.

When the scope of the authority delegated to an agency is challenged, that challenge is generally addressed under the analytical framework prescribed by Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. NRDC, 467 U.S. 837 (1984). That is because, “[n]o matter how it is framed, the question a court faces when confronted with an agency’s interpretation of a statute it administers is always, simply, whether the agency has stayed within the bounds of its statutory authority.” City of Arlington v. FCC, 569 U.S. 290, 297 (2013) (emphasis removed); see also Am. Farm Bureau Fed’n v. EPA, 792 F.3d 281, 295 (3d Cir. 2015) (applying Chevron framework to resolve “[w]hether an [agency] interpretation falls within the scope of authority that Congress has delegated”) (internal punctuation omitted).

There are two steps to the Chevron analysis. Step One asks “whether Congress has directly spoken to the precise question at issue.” Chevron, 467 U.S. at 842. “If the intent of Congress is clear, that is the end of the matter; for the court, as well as the agency, must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress.” Id. at 842-43. But, “[i]f the statute is ambiguous on the point,” Step Two requires “defer[ence] . . . to the agency’s interpretation so long as the construction is ‘a reasonable policy choice for the agency to make.’” National Cable & Telecomm. Ass’n v. Brand X Internet Servs., 545 U.S. 967, 986 (2005) (quoting Chevron, 467 U.S. at 845).

Here, as noted, the ACA provides that any “group health plan” or “health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for” “preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA].” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a) (emphasis added). On its face, the Women’s Health Amendment does not contemplate exceptions or exemptions to the “preventive care” coverage mandate—much less delegate authority to the Agencies to create such exemptions.²¹ Rather, the statute directs that all specified health plans and insurance issuers “shall” cover “preventive care,” however defined. “Shall” is a mandatory term that “normally creates an obligation imperious to judicial [or agency] discretion.” Lexecon, Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998). Thus, by stating that the specified plans “shall” provide coverage for “preventive care,” the statute sets forth who is bound by the coverage mandate (any “group health plan” or “health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage”), while delegating to the Agencies the task of defining what counts as “preventive care.” The statute further underscores the importance of the Contraceptive Mandate, by stipulating that the specified health plans must provide preventive care coverage “at a minimum” and without “any cost sharing requirements.”

Nonetheless, the Agencies assert that they hold the authority to issue the far-reaching exemptions to the Contraceptive Mandate set out in the Final Rules. They argue that the statement “as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA]” contemplates a broad delegation of authority, that permits the Agencies not only to define preventive care, but also the manner and reach of “preventive care” coverage.

42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a). Effectively, the Agencies’ argument is that the statute authorizes them to carve out, contrary to the express remits of the statute, categories of entities who need not provide preventive care coverage. But such a grant of authority is inconsistent with the statute’s text. Congress has already answered who must provide preventive care coverage: any “group health plan” or “health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage.” To permit the Agencies to disrupt this mandate contradicts the plain command of the text.

There are further textual reasons to doubt that the phrase “as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA]” permits such an extensive delegation. True enough, the statute speaks to “comprehensive guidelines,” which suggests a broad scope. But the delicate term support undermines this contention: it strains credulity to say that by granting HRSA the authority to “support” guidelines on “preventive care,” Congress necessarily delegated to HRSA the authority to subvert the “preventive care” coverage mandate through the blanket exemptions set out in the Final Rules.

MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 512 U.S. 218 (1994), is instructive. In that case, the Supreme Court rejected an agency’s assertion of authority—similar to the assertion here—to create exceptions to statutory requirements. Id. at 234. There, the statutory scheme at issue required that “[e]very common carrier . . . shall . . . file” tariffs, and also granted the Federal Communications Commission (“FCC”) the authority to “modify any requirement made by or under the authority of this section.” Id. at 224 (quoting 47 U.S.C. § 203). The FCC asserted that the grant of authority to “modify” the statutory requirements permitted it to eliminate the filing requirement for certain entities altogether. The Supreme Court firmly rejected this view, finding that the FCC’s authority to “modify” statutory requirements did not allow the FCC to make “basic and fundamental changes” to the command of the statute. Id. at 225. In a passage particularly on point here, the Supreme Court reasoned that “[i]t is highly unlikely that Congress would leave the determination of whether an industry will be entirely, or even substantially, rate-regulated to agency discretion—and even more unlikely that it would achieve that through such a subtle device as permission to ‘modify’ rate-filing requirements.” Id. at 231.

The logic of M.C.I. compels the conclusion that Congress’s limited delegation to the Agencies does not include authority to create broad exemptions to the Contraceptive Mandate. In M.C.I., the Court held that the agency could not create exceptions for statutorily mandated filing requirements—despite the fact that, there, the text explicitly authorized the agency to “modify” statutory requirements. Here, the statute presents no authority at all to “modify” or waive statutory requirements. As in M.C.I., if Congress intended to grant the Agency such broad authority, it has the means available to it to do so. See Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’n, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001) (“Congress . . . does not . . . hide elephants in mouseholes.”).

Defendants argue to the contrary that the text and structure of the ACA permit the Agencies to issue the Final Rules, primarily thanks to the use of the word “as” in the Women’s Health Amendment. They note that the Women’s Health Amendment follows immediately after—and differs slightly from—another subsection of the ACA that speaks to preventive care coverage, for children. Specifically, the Women’s Health Amendment mandates coverage for “preventive care and screenings . . . as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA],” while the subsection pertaining to children mandates coverage for “preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines supported by [HRSA].” 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-13(a)(3)-(4) (emphasis added). Proceeding from the statutory maxim that statutes “must be interpreted, if possible, to give each word some operative effect,” Walters v. Metro. Educ. Enter., Inc., 519 U.S. 202, 209 (1997), Defendants conclude that the inclusion of the word “as” in the women’s subsection means that HRSA may determine not only the services covered by the ACA, but also the manner or reach of that coverage.

The impact of the word “as” in this instance can be determined by “look[ing] to dictionary definitions to determine the ordinary meaning of a word,” while bearing in mind that “statutory language must be read with reference to its statutory context.” Bonkowski v. Oberg Indus., Inc., 787 F.3d 190, 200 (3d Cir. 2015) (internal quotation marks omitted). The term “as” in this context could mean “[u]sed in comparisons to refer to the extent or degree of something,” “[u]sed to indicate that something happens during the time when something else is taking place,” or “[u]sed to indicate by comparison the way that something happens or is done.” As, Oxford English Dictionary Online (January 2018), <https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/as>.

Defendants argue for either the first or third of these definitions, asserting that the “as” here means something like “as you like it.” However, the statutory context indicates that the second definition is the most appropriate. When Congress passed the ACA, HRSA had already promulgated guidelines defining children’s preventive care. HRSA had not yet promulgated such guidelines for women’s preventive care. Thus, the ACA requires coverage “provided for in the” preexisting HRSA guidelines for children’s care. The use of the article “the” demonstrates that Congress referred to particular, extant guidelines governing children’s preventive care. Giving effect to the use of the word “as” with regard to the Women’s Health Amendment leads to the conclusion that Congress used “as” here to indicate that the HRSA guidelines would be forthcoming, i.e. in anticipation of HRSA issuing guidelines—not to the conclusion that the ACA implicitly provides the Agencies with the authority to create exemptions.

Further, even if the word “as” is read to “indicate by comparison” the “extent,” “degree” or “way” the Agencies may promulgate guidelines, that definition does not help Defendants, for the following reason. The most natural comparison available in the statute—as Defendants recognize—would be to the pre-ACA children’s health preventive services guidelines. And comparing the children’s guidelines to the women’s guidelines ultimately undermines Defendants’ reading of the statute. That is because the children’s guidelines simply define a list of “preventive care” services—that is, what must be covered. See HHS, Preventive Care Benefits for Children, available at <https://www.healthcare.gov/preventive-care-children>. They do not include any exemptions to that coverage; indeed, the children’s guidelines do not speak at all to who must provide that coverage. And that makes sense because Congress already defined the who: any “group health plan” or “health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage”—the same plans that “shall” cover women’s preventive services without cost sharing. Thus if Congress employed “as” here to create a comparison to the children’s care guidelines, then Congress assuredly did not intend to permit HRSA to craft exemptions to the types of preventive care that would be required. Rather, Congress intended that HRSA would create a parallel set of guidelines, setting forth the types of “preventive care” to be covered, without exception.

The conclusion that the Women’s Health Amendment does not grant HRSA the power to create exemptions is bolstered by other provisions of the ACA. Congress created only a single exemption from the ACA’s statutory mandate to cover women’s preventive care, for “grandfathered health plans.” 42 U.S.C. § 18011(e)(3). In accordance with the expressio unius est exclusio alterius principle, “[w]hen Congress provides exceptions in a statute . . . [t]he proper inference . . . is that Congress considered the issue of exceptions and, in the end, limited the statute to the ones set forth.” United States v. Johnson, 529 U.S. 53, 58 (2000). The fact that there is no religious or moral exemption in the explicit text of the statute, while there is an exemption for grandfathered health plans, militates against finding that Congress authorized the Agencies to create any additional exemptions. Indeed, that interpretation is supported by the legislative history, given that, in 2012, Congress explicitly rejected an attempt to add to the ACA an exemption similar to that contained in the Final Rules. See 158 Cong. Rec. S1165 (Mar. 1, 2012); see also Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 147 (2000) (rejection of an agency’s interpretation by Congress is a factor courts consider when determining the meaning of a statute).

For these reasons, the ACA prohibits HRSA from exempting entities from providing such coverage as set forth in the Final Rules. Accordingly, the Final Rules violate the APA and fail at Chevron’s Step One.

ii. RFRA

Defendants argue that, even if the ACA does not grant the Agencies authority to issue the Final Rules, RFRA independently enables the Agencies to issue the Final Religious Exemption.²² They assert that the Contraceptive Mandate cannot be brought into accord with RFRA by anything less than the provisions contained in the Final Religious Exemption, and that, as such, RFRA “required” the promulgation of the rule. But it is the courts, not the Agencies, that determine RFRA’s reach. And the Final Religious Exemption goes far beyond RFRA’s command.

Congress enacted RFRA in 1993 following the Supreme Court’s decision in Employment Div., Dep’t of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872 (1990).

In Smith, the Supreme Court held that “the Constitution does not require judges to engage in a case-by-case assessment of the religious burdens imposed by facially constitutional laws,” and thus strict scrutiny did not apply to Free Exercise challenges to laws of general applicability. Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal, 546 U.S. 418, 424 (2000). Prior to Smith, in decisions such as Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398 (1963), courts employed “a balancing test that took into account whether the challenged action imposed a substantial burden on the practice of religion, and if it did, whether it was needed to serve a compelling government interest,” Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. at 2760. With RFRA, Congress sought to restore the pre-Smith judicial standard. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb(b)(1) (stating that a purpose of the statute is “to restore the compelling interest test as set forth in Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398 (1963) and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972) and to guarantee its application in all cases where free exercise of religion is substantially burdened”); see also Gonzales, 546 at 424, 430-31.

In accordance with this goal, RFRA provides that the “Government shall not substantially burden a person’s exercise of religion even if the burden results from a rule of general applicability,” unless “it demonstrates that application of the burden to the person—(1) is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest; and (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(a)-(b). Accordingly, RFRA has two components. First, the government is prohibited from placing a substantial burden on religious exercise. If government action does not impose a substantial burden on religion, then RFRA is not implicated. However, if it does, the government action must be struck down unless it is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling interest.

Despite Defendants' contention that the Agencies may determine what RFRA demands with respect to the ACA, RFRA provides, to the contrary, that it is the courts that are charged with determining RFRA's application. RFRA "explicitly provides a private cause of action," Mack v. Warden Loretto FCI, 839 F.3d 286, 301 (3d Cir. 2016), which permits an aggrieved individual to obtain "Judicial Relief," and contemplates them doing so in a "judicial proceeding," 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1(c). More specifically, RFRA states that, "[a] person whose religious exercise has been burdened . . . may assert that violation as a claim or defense in a judicial proceeding and obtain appropriate relief against a government." Id. RFRA thus commits to the courts the task of determining whether generally applicable laws violate a person's religious exercise: "RFRA . . . plainly contemplates that courts would recognize exceptions—that is how the law works. . . . RFRA makes clear that it is the obligation of the courts to consider whether exceptions are required under the test set forth by Congress." Gonzales, 546 U.S. at 434 (emphasis in original).

Nevertheless, the Agencies contend that they are independently required to assess how RFRA bears on the Contraceptive Mandate and that their authority to promulgate the Final Religious Exemption flows from that obligation. In years past, the Agencies asserted that the accommodation did not impose a substantial burden on any entity's religious exercise and that guaranteeing cost-free contraceptive coverage did serve several compelling government interests. The Agencies now take the obverse positions: that the accommodation constitutes a substantial burden on the religious exercise of objecting employers and that the contraceptive mandate does not serve “any compelling interest.” Indeed, they go further—arguing that this new set of views “in itself, is dispositive,” as a matter of law. In essence, they have taken on the quintessentially judicial tasks of determining whether the application of the Contraceptive Mandate to objecting entities constitutes a substantial burden, whether any burden was in furtherance of a compelling government interest, and whether the accommodation was the least restrictive means of accomplishing contraceptive coverage. Having taken on those tasks, the Agencies—based on their independent assessments of these legal questions—now claim that RFRA “requires” the Final Religious Exemption.

Their position is unsustainable for a number of reasons, the foremost being that administrative agencies may not simply formulate a view of a law outside their particular area of expertise, issue regulations pursuant to that view, claim that the law requires those regulations, then seek to insulate their legal determination from judicial scrutiny. It is axiomatic that under our constitutional system, “[i]t is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is.” Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177 (1803). Nothing about RFRA warrants departure from this general maxim. To the contrary, RFRA specifically provides only for “Judicial Relief,” 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000bb-1(c), thereby committing interpretative authority to the courts—not to agencies. See Gonzales, 546 U.S. at 434; see also Real Alternatives, Inc. v. Sec’y

Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 867 F.3d 338, 356 (3d Cir. 2017) (“[I]t is for the reviewing court to determine whether a burden is ‘substantial.’”). Indeed, in the Hobby Lobby decision, the Supreme Court found that agency action violated RFRA, without ever suggesting that the agency’s interpretation was entitled to deference. See Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. at 2775-85 (analyzing whether the Contraceptive Mandate violated RFRA, without discussion of deference to agency view); see also Thomas W. Merrill, Step Zero After City of Arlington, 83 Fordham L. Rev. 753, 759 (2014) (“[T]he [Supreme] Court has never suggested that trans-substantive statutes like the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) or the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) should be interpreted by giving deference to agency interpretations.”).

Nevertheless, Defendants cast their new legal contentions as reasonable policy decisions within their ambit of expertise. Of course, where a statute leaves gaps for an agency to fill, the agency may change its interpretation so long as it provides a “reasoned explanation for the change.” Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 136 S. Ct. 2117, 2125 (2016). However, what Defendants attempt to do here is not a change of interpretation regarding an ambiguous statute they are tasked with administering. Rather, Defendants are baldly asserting—with respect to a statute that does not explicitly delegate them any authority—what RFRA “requires.” Defendants have no expertise in administering RFRA. See Gonzales, 546 U.S. at 434; see also Real Alternatives, 867 F.3d at 356; Iglesia Pentecostal Casa De Dios Para Las Naciones, Inc. v. Duke, 718 F. App’x 646, 653 (10th Cir. 2017) (holding that the question of whether a RFRA violation exists is “a legal determination that Congress has not exclusively entrusted to” agencies) (internal quotation marks omitted). While Defendants may change course in their legal assessment of what RFRA commands, this is not the final word. Ultimately, it is up to the courts to decide.

It is true, as Defendants point out, that there is a great deal of “legal uncertainty” about RFRA’s precise application to the Contraceptive Mandate. But on the specific question presented here—whether RFRA “requires” the Final Religious Exemption—the law is clear.

To set out Defendants’ position in greater detail, yet another review of Hobby Lobby is in order. There, the Supreme Court held that “[t]he contraceptive mandate, as applied to closely held corporations, violates RFRA.” 134 S. Ct. at 2785. The Supreme Court reasoned that the Contraceptive Mandate imposed a substantial burden on the religious exercise of the plaintiffs—closely held corporations—and that the burden was not the least restrictive means of providing contraceptive coverage to women. With specific regard to the least restrictive means element, the Supreme Court explained that the Agencies had already created a less restrictive means to both ensure women had contraceptive coverage and reduce the burden on religious objectors: the accommodation. Id. at 2781-82. As noted, the accommodation allowed eligible religious objectors to notify their healthcare administrator of their religious objection, and the administrator would then have to provide the legally required contraceptive services directly to women covered under the employer’s plan. Because the accommodation “[did] not impinge on the plaintiffs’ religious belief that providing insurance coverage for the contraceptives at issue here violates their religion,” and still accomplished the government's goal of providing contraceptive coverage, the Supreme Court found that the Contraceptive Mandate, as applied to the plaintiffs, was not the least restrictive means, and thus violated RFRA. Id. at 2782. Importantly, the Supreme Court reserved on the question of "whether an approach of this type complies with RFRA for purposes of all religious claims." Id. Following Hobby Lobby, in Zubik, the Supreme Court declined to decide the question of whether the accommodation itself imposed a substantial burden on plaintiff nonprofits' religious exercise; instead, it remanded so that the parties might come to a resolution on their own, whereby the plaintiffs' employees could receive contraceptive coverage without the plaintiffs' having to submit the form required by the accommodation. 136 S. Ct. at 1559-60.

Based on these rulings, Defendants assert that RFRA "requires" the Religious Exemption, because their previous attempts to satisfy RFRA with the accommodation failed. This theory rests on three legal conclusions: (1) a blanket exemption from the Contraceptive Mandate for religious objectors strays no further than RFRA demands; (2) the accommodation did not relieve the substantial burden identified by the Supreme Court in Hobby Lobby; and, (3) the contraceptive mandate imposes a substantial burden on publicly traded corporations. But each of these views is either incorrect under the law—as previously determined by precedential rulings—or a significant extension of existing doctrine. Accordingly, Defendants have stepped beyond the demands of RFRA, and the Final Religious Exemption cannot be justified as a "requirement" of RFRA.

As to the first conclusion—that a blanket exemption for religious objectors goes no further than RFRA demands—a close read of Hobby Lobby demonstrates that the Agencies’ conclusion is incorrect. There, the Supreme Court explained that an exemption akin to the Final Religious Exemption goes beyond RFRA’s requirements. 134 S. Ct. at 2775 n.30. More specifically, prior to enacting the ACA, Congress had considered but ultimately voted down a ‘conscience amendment,’ which, like the Final Religious Exemption, enabled an employer or insurance provider to deny coverage based on its asserted religious beliefs. Id. The Hobby Lobby majority concluded it was “reasonable to believe that” Congress rejected the amendment because such a “blanket exemption” for religious objectors “extended more broadly than the . . . protections of RFRA.” Id. That is because “it would not have subjected religious-based objections to the judicial scrutiny called for by RFRA, in which a court must consider not only the burden of a requirement on religious adherents, but also the government’s interest and how narrowly tailored the requirement is.” Id. Thus, as the Hobby Lobby Court recognized, the blanket exemption the Agencies have set forth “extend[s] more broadly than the . . . protections of RFRA.” Plainly then, RFRA cannot “require” such a rule, which creates precisely this blanket exemption.

As to the second conclusion—that the accommodation imposes a substantial burden on the religious exercise of objecting entities—Defendants are incorrect under the law of this circuit. While the Supreme Court has not resolved this precise issue, Third Circuit authority demonstrates that, contrary to the Agencies’ view, the accommodation does not impose a substantial burden. See Geneva Coll. v. Sec’y U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 778 F.3d 422, 442 (3d Cir. 2015), vacated and remanded sub nom. Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016) (per curiam); see also Real Alternatives, 867 F.3d at 356 n.18. The accommodation has been specifically upheld against a RFRA challenge by the Third Circuit, first, and directly, in Geneva Coll., 778 F.3d at 442, and second, by implication, in Real Alternatives, 867 F.3d at 356 n.18. Defendants argue that Geneva is no longer good law because it was vacated by the Supreme Court in Zubik. But the Supreme Court in Zubik specifically declined to decide the merits of the RFRA challenge to the accommodation, by explicitly refraining from “decid[ing] whether petitioners’ religious exercise has been substantially burdened.” 136 S. Ct. at 1560. Instead, the Supreme Court vacated Geneva (and related decisions from other Circuit courts) and remanded for the express purpose of allowing the parties “an opportunity to arrive at an approach going forward that accommodates petitioners’ religious exercise while at the same time ensuring that women covered by petitioners’ health plans receive full and equal health coverage, including contraceptive coverage.” Id.

Following Zubik, the Third Circuit reiterated in Real Alternatives that it “continue[s] to believe . . . that the regulation at issue”—the accommodation—“did not impose a substantial burden.” Real Alternatives, 867 F.3d at 356 n.18. Defendants characterize this statement as dicta, and indeed, the issues in the two cases were slightly distinct. In Geneva, nonprofits eligible for the accommodation asserted that filling out the accommodation form “facilitated” or “triggered” the provision of contraceptives, thereby substantially burdening their religious exercise. 778 F.3d at 427. In Real Alternatives, employees of a secular employer similarly asserted that the Contraceptive Mandate violated RFRA because their purchase of insurance enabled the provision of contraceptives. 867 F.3d at 359. What Defendants overlook is that in Real Alternatives the Third Circuit reaffirmed and reapplied the reasoning of Geneva. In both cases, the Third Circuit found that there was no substantial burden on the plaintiffs' religious exercise because their actions were insufficiently related to the provision of contraceptives and "an independent obligation on a third party can[not] impose a substantial burden on the exercise of religion in violation of RFRA." Id. at 364 (quoting Geneva, 778 F.3d at 440-41). Accordingly, applying the law of this circuit as announced in Real Alternatives, the accommodation does not impose a substantial burden on religious exercise.

The third conclusion—that the Contraceptive Mandate imposes a substantial burden on the religious exercise of publicly traded corporations—goes considerably beyond existing jurisprudence. In Hobby Lobby, the Supreme Court found that the Contraceptive Mandate imposed a substantial burden on the specific plaintiffs in that case: "closely held corporations, each owned and controlled by members of a single family." 134 S. Ct. at 2774. It explicitly declined to extend its holding to publicly traded corporations, suggesting that publicly traded corporations would be unlikely to hold a singular, sincere religious belief:

These cases, however, do not involve publicly traded corporations, and it seems unlikely that the sort of corporate giants to which HHS refers will often assert RFRA claims. HHS has not pointed to any example of a publicly traded corporation asserting RFRA rights, and numerous practical restraints would likely prevent that from occurring. For example, the idea that unrelated shareholders—including institutional investors with their own set of stakeholders—would agree to run a corporation under the same religious beliefs seems improbable. In any event, we have no occasion in these cases to consider RFRA’s applicability to such companies.

Id. Defendants assert that it is reasonable to include publicly traded corporations in the Religious Exemption. But, as Hobby Lobby makes clear, RFRA does not “require” this expansion.

Thus, even if the Agencies are correct that the accommodation imposes a substantial burden on religious employers, and that they must act, through regulation, to relieve that burden,²³ the Final Religious Exemption

²³ Defendants contend that the Final Rules—like earlier rules that created the exemption and accommodation framework—are merely the Agencies’ attempts to respond to the Supreme Court’s decisions in Hobby Lobby, Wheaton College, and Zubik. After each of those decisions, the Agencies promulgated generally applicable regulations that expanded or modified the exemption and accommodation framework in an attempt to bring the Agencies’ actions in line with what the Supreme Court said RFRA commands. According to Defendants, that is all that is happening here, the only difference being the States have now challenged the Agencies’ authority to do so.

Fair enough. Nonetheless, this challenge raises a fundamental question: whether RFRA grants agencies independent authority to issue regulations of general applicability, like the Final Religious Exemption. It is worth noting that the scope of affirmative author-sweeps further than RFRA would require. The Agencies’ willingness to exceed the bounds of existing case law demonstrates that the Agencies have cast aside RFRA’s mandate for “judicial scrutiny . . . in which

ity, if any, that RFRA grants to agencies to issue regulations of general applicability—whether in response to judicial interpretations of RFRA or based on their own assessments of RFRA’s application—is distinctly undetermined. Neither Hobby Lobby, nor Wheaton College, nor Zubik resolved this question—nor, does it appear, has any other court. The statutory language does not provide a clear answer. On the one hand, RFRA “applies to all Federal law, and the implementation of that law, whether statutory or otherwise,” which could possibly be read to grant agencies some authority to promulgate regulations on a generalized basis. 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-3(a) (emphasis added). However, RFRA is fundamentally a remedial measure, that by its terms “provide[s] a claim or defense to persons whose religious exercise is substantially burdened by government,” id. at § 2000bb(b)(2), in a “judicial proceeding” in order to “obtain appropriate relief against a government,” id. at § 2000bb-1(c) (emphasis added). See also Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. at 2775 n.30; Gonzales, 546 U.S. at 430-31, 434. Indeed, quite recently, the federal government suggested that RFRA does not permit an agency to create exemptions to regulations absent a judicial determination, albeit in a case that did not focus on this issue in great depth. See Iglesia Pentecostal, 718 F. App’x at 653 (recounting federal government’s position that “[a]bsent a judicial finding that the regulation violates RFRA, neither the director of USCIS nor the AAO has any discretion to set aside any provision of those regulations.”) (brackets omitted).

Put simply, it is not clear what, if any, affirmative authority RFRA grants to agencies to issue regulations of general applicability. The parties do not point to any authority that resolves this question. Nor has independent research yielded definitive answers. While this large question looms in the background, the Court need not decide it here. Whatever the extent of an agency’s authority under RFRA, the Agencies here have exceeded it in promulgating the Final Religious Exemption.

a court must consider not only the burden of a requirement on religious adherents, but also the government's interest and how narrowly tailored the requirement is." Id. at 2775 n.30 (emphasis added). Accordingly, the Religious Exemption cannot be justified under RFRA.

Because neither the ACA nor RFRA confer authority on the Agencies to promulgate the Religious Exemption, the rule is invalid.²⁴

In light of these conclusions, the States have demonstrated an adequate likelihood of success on the merits in support of their motion for preliminary relief.

3. Irreparable Harm

The second factor to consider in deciding the States' motion is whether they have demonstrated that they are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of a preliminary injunction. The Supreme Court's "frequently reiterated standard requires plaintiffs seeking preliminary relief to demonstrate that irreparable injury is likely in the absence of an injunction." Winter, 555 U.S. at 22 (emphasis in original); see id. ("Issuing a preliminary injunction based only on a possibility of irreparable harm is inconsistent with the characterization of injunctive relief as an extraordinary remedy that may be awarded only upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief.”). The States assert that they will suffer two forms of irreparable harm in the absence of an injunction: (1) significant damage to the States’ fiscal integrity; and (2) harm to the health, safety, and wellness of the women of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The Court finds both sufficient to justify preliminary relief.

As to the harm to the States’ fiscal integrity, the States’ evidence demonstrates that it is likely that the Final Rules will cause direct and irreparable harm. The States will become obligated to shoulder much of the burden of providing contraceptive services to women who lose contraceptive care because their health plans take advantage of the expanded exemptions contained in the Final Rules. See Steinberg Decl. ¶¶ 27-29 (discussing Pennsylvania); Geenace Decl. ¶¶ 15-17 (discussing New Jersey). Such women will seek contraceptive services elsewhere and, as Defendants noted in issuing the IFRs, may turn to “multiple . . . State[] and local programs that provide free or subsidized contraceptives for low-income women” for alternative coverage. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 47,803. In Pennsylvania, these state funded programs include: Medicaid, called “Medicaid Assistance;” the Family Planning Service Program; and the Commonwealth’s network of clinics funded under the Title X grant program. See Allen Decl. ¶¶ 3-18; Steinberg Decl. ¶ 16. New Jersey funds similar programs through Medicaid, known as “NJ Family Care,” and the State’s Plan First Program. Adelman Dec. ¶¶ 9-14. As women in the States lose contraceptive coverage through their health insurance plans and turn to state-funded programs, it is likely that the States will bear the added financial burden occasioned by the increase in women who need contraceptive care coverage. See Mendelsohn Decl. ¶¶ 15-18; Allen Decl. ¶ 23; Geenace Decl. ¶¶ 15-18.

The States' harm is not merely speculative; it is actual and imminent. The Final Rules estimate that at least 70,500 women will lose coverage. See 83 Fed. Reg. at 57,578.²⁵ Thus, the only serious disagreement is not whether the States will be harmed, but how much. Though Defendants argue that the States have not identified any individual who has lost coverage already, there is no need to wait for the axe to fall before an injunction is appropriate, particularly where Defendants have estimated that it is about to fall on thousands of women—and, as a corollary, on the States. See Texas, 809 F.3d at 186 (granting relief based on predicted harm to States' fises).

While “loss of money” is generally insufficient to merit a preliminary injunction, see Instant Air Freight Co. v. C.F. Air Freight, Inc., 882 F.2d 797, 801 (3d Cir. 1989), here, the harm to the States' fises is irreparable because they will not be able to recover any economic damages that result from the Final Rules. That is because a party—like the States here—which alleges an APA violation may not recover monetary damages from the federal government on that claim. See 5 U.S.C. § 702 (permitting relief “other than money damages”); California, 911 F.3d at 581 (finding irreparable harm in APA case on similar grounds). Therefore, if the Final Rules are ultimately struck down as violative of the ²⁵ The States argue that there is reason to believe the number is significantly higher because organizations taking advantage of the exemption need not inform the Agencies of their plan to do so.

APA, the States will not be able to recoup any money they expend on contraceptive care in the interim. In such circumstances, a preliminary injunction is appropriate. See, e.g., N.J. Retail Merchants Ass’n v. Sidamon-Eristoff, 669 F.3d 374, 388 (3d Cir. 2012) (holding that a preliminary injunction is appropriate where a movant could not recover damages from a State due to sovereign immunity).

In addition to pecuniary harm, the States also stand to suffer injury to their interest in protecting the safety and well-being of their citizens. See Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 607 (observing that a State has a “quasi-sovereign interest in the health and wellbeing—both physical and economic—of its residents in general”). The States’ witnesses explained that employers taking advantage of the Final Rules will result in more women losing no-cost contraceptive coverage. Mendelsohn Decl. ¶¶ 14-15; Adelman Decl. ¶ 20. As a result, women will likely forgo contraceptive services or seek out less expensive and less effective types of contraceptive services in the absence of no-cost insurance coverage. Weisman Decl. ¶¶ 45-48; Chuang Decl. ¶¶ 36-39; see also Adam Sonfield, What is at Stake with the Federal Contraceptive Coverage Guarantee?, 20 Guttmacher Policy Review 8, 9 (2017) (reporting that women cite cost as a significant factor in determining whether to purchase contraceptive services and which contraceptive services to use). Disruptions in contraceptive coverage will lead to women suffering unintended pregnancies and other medical consequences. Butts Decl. ¶¶ 57-59; Institute of Medicine, Clinical Prevention Services at 107 (explaining that contraceptive services are used to treat menstrual disorders, acne, hirsutism, and pelvic pain, in addition to assisting family planning and birth spacing).²⁶ The negative effects of even a short period of decreased access to no-cost contraceptive services are irreversible.

The States have therefore showed that they are likely to suffer irreparable harm as a result of the Rules' impact on both the States' fiscs and the welfare of the States' citizens.

4. Balance of the Equities

The third factor is that the balance of the equities tips in favor of granting a preliminary injunction. “Balancing the equities” is jurisprudential “jargon for choosing between conflicting public interests.” Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 609 (1943) (Frankfurter, J., concurring). Here, Congress has already struck the balance: the Women’s Health Amendment was intended to ensure women received no-cost coverage for preventive services, which includes contraceptives. As lead sponsor of the Women’s Health Amendment, Senator Barbara Mikulski, explained: the amendment “leaves the decision of which preventive services a patient will use between the doctor and the patient.” 155 Cong. Rec. S11988 (Nov. 30, 2009) (statement of Sen. Barbara Mikulski). Congress enacted the Women’s Health Amendment to guarantee that “the decision about what is medically appropriate and medically necessary is between a woman and her doctor.” Id. Where “Congress itself has struck the balance, [and] has defined the weight to be given the competing interests, a court of equity is not justified in ignoring that pronouncement under the guise of exercising equitable discretion.” Youngstown Sheet, 343 U.S. at 609-10.

Here, given the States’ clear interest in securing the health and well-being of women residents and limiting their costs for contraceptive services, the balance of the equities weighs in their favor. Defendants will not be substantially prejudiced by a preliminary injunction. If the Final Rules were issued in violation of applicable law, they will have suffered no harm. If Defendants ultimately prevail, then a preliminary injunction will have merely delayed their preferred regulatory outcome.

5. Public Interest

“If a plaintiff proves both a likelihood of success on the merits and irreparable injury, it almost always will be the case that the public interests favors preliminary relief.” Issa v. Sch. Dist. of Lancaster, 847 F.3d 121, 143 (3d Cir. 2017) (internal quotation marks omitted). So it proves here. A preliminary injunction is unquestionably in the public interest because it maintains the status quo pending the outcome of this litigation. The Final Rules permit any entity to opt out of coverage after 30 to 60 days’ notice to plan members. This litigation will not conclude in that short span. A preliminary injunction will maintain the status quo: those eligible for exemptions or accommodations prior to October 6, 2017 will maintain their status; those with injunctions preventing enforcement of the Contraceptive Mandate will maintain their injunctions;²⁷ those alleging RFRA

²⁷ For example, Defendant-Intervenor has secured a permanent injunction, preventing enforcement of the Contraceptive Mandate violations may pursue “Judicial Relief,” and those with coverage will maintain their coverage as well.

D. Remedy

Before concluding, an additional word is required on the scope of the preliminary injunction to be issued. When the IFRs were initially before this Court, they were enjoined generally, without any specific geographic or temporal limitation. See Pennsylvania, 281 F. Supp. 3d at 585.

Since then, however, much has been made about the propriety (or impropriety) of so-called nation-wide injunctions. See, e.g., Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. 2392, 2425 (2018) (Thomas, J., concurring); Zayn Siddique, Nationwide Injunctions, 117 Colum. L. Rev. 2095 (2017); Samuel L. Bray, Multiple Chancellors: Reforming the National Injunction, 131 Harv. L. Rev. 417 (2017). In light of this increased focus on the proper exercise of district courts’ remedial powers, it is prudent to explain in some detail why a nation-wide injunction is appropriate here.

First, it is well established that a district court sitting in equity has the authority to enter a nation-wide injunction. See Leman v. Krentler-Arnold Hinge Last Co., 284 U.S. 448, 451 (1932) (holding district court’s order “binding upon the respondent, not simply within the District of Massachusetts, but throughout the United States”); Texas, 809 F.3d at 188 (“[T]he Constitution vests the District Court with ‘the judicial power of the United States.’ That power is not limited to the district against it. See Little Sisters of the Poor v. Azar, No. 1:13-cv-02611, Dkt. 82 (D. Colo. May 29, 2018). Nothing in this Court’s ruling will disturb that order.

wherein the court sits but extends across the country.”) (quoting U.S. Const. art. III, § 1); McLendon v. Cont’l Can Co., 908 F.2d 1171, 1182 (3d Cir. 1990) (holding “[f]ull relief required a nationwide injunction”). The issue, then, is whether a nation-wide injunction is appropriate here, given the facts of this specific case.

“In shaping equity decrees, the trial court is vested with broad discretionary power.” Lemon v. Kurtzman, 411 U.S. 192, 200 (1973) (plurality opinion). That is because crafting equitable remedies is an inexact science; instead, “equitable remedies are a special blend of what is necessary, what is fair, and what is workable.” Id.; see also Trump v. Int’l Refugee Assistance Project, 137 S. Ct. 2080, 2087 (2017) (“Crafting a preliminary injunction is an exercise of discretion and judgment, often dependent as much on the equities of a given case as the substance of the legal issues it presents.”). As Justice Douglas succinctly put it seventy-five years ago: “[t]he essence of equity jurisdiction has been the power of the Chancellor to do equity and to mould each decree to the necessities of the particular case. Flexibility rather than rigidity has distinguished it.” Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329 (1944).

The Supreme Court articulated the relevant standard for determining the proper scope of a preliminary injunction in Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682 (1979), stating that “injunctive relief should be no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to the plaintiffs.” Id. at 702 (emphasis added). Subsequent Supreme Court and lower court decisions have treated the “no more burdensome than necessary” rubric as the “general rule” for determining whether an injunction is overbroad. Madsen v. Women’s Health Center, Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 765 (1994); see also Trump, 137 S. Ct. at 2090 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); see also McLendon, 908 F.2d at 1182 (“In granting injunctive relief, the court’s remedy should be no broader than necessary to provide full relief to the aggrieved plaintiff.”).²⁸

The Califano standard requires district courts to balance the competing principles of providing complete relief to meritorious plaintiffs against a defendant’s right to be free from overly burdensome injunctions. The complete relief requirement reflects the “well-settled principle that the nature and scope of the remedy are to be determined by the violation.” Milliken v. Bradley, 433 U.S. 267, 281-82 (1977). Where a violation has been found, “the remedy does not ‘exceed’ the violation if the remedy is tailored to cure the ‘condition that offends [the law.]’” Id. at 282 (quoting Milliken v. Bradley, 418 U.S. 717, 738 (1974)).

The complete relief principle explains why, in APA cases, “when a reviewing court determines that agency regulations are unlawful, the ordinary result is that the rules are vacated—not that their application to the individual petitioners is proscribed.” Nat’l Min. Ass’n v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 145 F.3d 1399, 1409 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (internal quotation marks omitted and emphasis added). Where “agency action . . . consist[s] of a rule of broad applicability” that violates the strictures of the APA, Lujan v. Nat’l Wildlife Fed’n, 497 U.S. 871, ²⁸ In Califano, the Court indicated that the “no more burdensome than necessary” standard is a general rule of injunctions, regardless of whether a nation-wide class-action is certified. See 442 U.S. at 702.

913 (Blackmun, J., dissenting),²⁹ a remedy “tailored to cure the condition that offends [the law]” may be correspondingly broad, Milliken, 433 U.S. at 282 (internal quotation marks omitted). Thus, when an individual challenges agency action and prevails, “the result is that the rule is invalidated, not simply that the court forbids its application to a particular individual.” Lujan, 497 U.S. at 913 (Blackmun, J., dissenting).³⁰ Put differently, the national character of an APA violation “ordinar[ily]” demands a national remedy. Nat’l Min. Ass’n, 145 F.3d at 1409.

At the same time, the Supreme Court has warned that injunctions should be “no more burdensome to the defendants than necessary.” Califano, 442 U.S. at 702. Over fifty years ago, Justice Fortas cautioned:

[A]rming each of the federal district judges in this Nation with power to enjoin enforcement of regulations and actions under the federal law designed to protect the people of this Nation . . . is a general hunting license; and I respectfully submit, a license for mischief because it authorizes aggression which is richly rewarded by delay in the subjection of private interests to programs which Congress believes to be required in the public interest.

²⁹ In Nat’l Min. Ass’n, the D.C. Circuit explained that, while Justice Blackmun’s observations came in a dissent, they “apparently express[ed] the view of all nine Justices on this question.” 145 F.3d at 1409.

Toilet Goods Ass’n v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 167, 183 (1967) (Fortas, J., dissenting). More recently, the Supreme Court has warned that overbroad injunctions “have detrimental effect[s] by foreclosing adjudication by a number of different courts and judges,” which “often will be preferable in order to gain the benefit of adjudication by different courts in different factual contexts.” Califano, 442 U.S. at 701-02; California, 911 F.3d at 583 (raising same concern). In addition, courts worry that overly broad injunctions invite “forum shopping, which hinders the equitable administration of laws.” California, 911 F.3d at 583 (citing Bray, Multiple Chancellors, 131 Harv. L. Rev. at 458-59).

The concerns about overbroad injunctions carry into APA cases. Courts have, at times, resisted granting nation-wide relief, even where “agency action . . . consist[s] of a rule of broad applicability.” Lujan, 497 U.S. at 913 (Blackmun, J., dissenting); see, e.g., California, 911 F.3d at 584 (finding an APA violation, but concluding “the scope of the preliminary injunction is overbroad”); Baeder v. Heckler, 768 F.2d 547, 553 (3d Cir. 1985) (holding regulation invalid, but determining district court did not have “the authority to issue an injunction aimed at controlling [Agency’s] behavior in every . . . case in the country”). Thus, while an APA violation may “ordinar[ily]” result in a nation-wide remedy, the potential dangers of an overbroad injunction must still be weighed when crafting a remedy for an APA violation.

The upshot is that striking the appropriate balance between providing complete relief to meritorious plaintiffs, on the one hand, and protecting defendants from overly burdensome injunctions, on the other, is necessarily a difficult line-drawing exercise, even in APA cases.

To see why, recall the injury the States stand to suffer from enforcement of the Final Rules: both Pennsylvania and New Jersey complain that, because enforcement of the Final Rules will result in “numerous insureds—and their female dependents—[losing] the medical coverage for contraceptive care required by the Affordable Care Act,” the States will suffer “significant, direct and proprietary harm” in the form of increased use of state-funded contraceptive services as well as increased costs associated with unintended pregnancies. Affording complete relief to the States would require the Court to enjoin enforcement of the Final Rules as to all entities that “offer[] and arrange[]” health insurance to insureds residing in Pennsylvania or New Jersey.³¹

But drafting—much less enforcing—a preliminary injunction that runs only to those entities is nigh impossible. Neither the Court nor the parties can readily ascertain what those entities are or whether they intend to take advantage of the exemption, given that providing notice to the Agencies is only optional under the Final Rules. At the same time, the Court cannot, consistent with Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure simply and broadly enjoin “all entities that offer and arrange health insurance to insureds residing in Pennsylvania or New Jersey.” That is because “[e]very order granting an injunction . . . must . . . state its terms specifically and describe in reasonable detail—and not by referring to the complaint or other document—the act or acts restrained.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 65 (internal punctuation omitted).

Given the challenges associated with crafting a “perfect” injunction, district courts tend to rely on geographic proxies when tailoring a remedy. For example, the Ninth Circuit—hearing an appeal from a district court decision that also enjoined the enforcement of the IFRs nation-wide—held that “an injunction that applies only to the plaintiff states would provide complete relief to them.” California, 911 F.3d at 584; see also California v. Health & Human Servs., — F. Supp. —, No. 17-cv-5783, ECF No. 234 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (enjoining enforcement of Final Rules within plaintiff States only). Defendants similarly argue that, if the Final Rules are to be enjoined, then the injunction should be limited to Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The problem with the Ninth Circuit’s approach, however, is that it simply does not afford the meritorious plaintiffs—the States—complete relief. Hundreds of thousands of the States’ citizens travel across state lines—to New York, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and even further afield—to work for out-of-state entities. See Amici Curiae Brief of Massachu- setts, et al. in Support of Plaintiffs’ Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, at 13-14 (2019) (noting that “548,040 New Jersey residents, or 14% of the workforce, and 299,970 Pennsylvania residents, or 5.4% of the workforce” travel to jobs in other states) (citing U.S. Census Bureau, Out-of-State and Long Commutes: 2011, American Community Survey Reports, at 10 (Feb. 2013), available at <https://www2.census.gov/library/publications/2013/acs/acs-20.pdf>). Furthermore, with their many universities and educational institutes, the States take in tens of thousands of out-of-state students each year. Id. at 14 (noting that Pennsylvania takes in 32,000 out-of-state students alone) (citing Nat’l Ctr. for Education Statistics, Residence and Migration of All First-Time Degree/Certificate-Seeking Undergraduates (2017), available at https://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/d17/tables/dt17_309.20.asp?current=ye).

An injunction limited to Pennsylvania and New Jersey would, by its terms, not reach Pennsylvania and New Jersey citizens who work for out-of-state employers. Despite residing in the States, those out-of-state workers could lose contraceptive coverage if the out-of-state employers took advantage of the exemptions included in the Final Rules, resulting in proprietary harm to the States. Nor would an injunction limited to the States cover out-of-state students attending school in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, who may not be considered “residents” of the States. Such students, by remaining on their parents’ out-of-state employer-based health plans or other health insurance through their State of “residency,” could lose contraceptive coverage but still turn to in-state publicly-funded clinics for contraceptive coverage. Put differently, “an injunction that applies only to the plaintiff states” would not “provide complete relief to them” because it would not “prevent the economic harm extensively detailed in the record.” California, 911 F.3d at 584.

Injunctions that are intermediate in geographic scope—that is, applicable beyond the States but not nation-wide—encounter the same problems in ensuring “complete relief to the plaintiffs.” Madsen, 512 U.S. at 765. An injunction limited to the Third Circuit, for example, would fail to account for the thousands of Pennsylvania and New Jersey citizens that commute to neighboring or nearby states outside the Third Circuit for work. Similarly, an injunction covering the surrounding states would not account for the fact that the States draw out-of-state students from across the nation.

At the same time, the Court recognizes that, on the record before it, a nation-wide injunction may prove “broader than necessary to provide full relief” to the States. McLendon, 908 F.2d at 1182. The States concede, for example, that there is no evidence that any citizen of the States physically commutes to New Mexico, so an injunction that covers the Land of Enchantment appears “broader than unnecessary.” Nor have the States presented evidence of a New Mexican that currently attends a Pennsylvania or New Jersey institute of higher learning, who may lose her contraceptive coverage through her out-of-state insurance. The same can be said for a host of other states.

Ultimately, crafting a remedy that provides “complete relief to the plaintiffs,” while being “no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary” would require empirical data—the working conditions of each and every citizen of the States—that is simply not ascertainable.³² In the absence of such information, the Court must exercise “discretion and judgment,” Trump, 137 S. Ct. at 2087, in balancing the competing risks and uncertainties associated with either a potentially under- or over-inclusive remedy, bearing in mind the maxim that “[w]e should not allow the infeasible perfect to oust the feasible good.” Resorts Int’l Hotel Casino v. NLRB, 996 F.2d 1553, 1558 (3d Cir. 1993) (internal quotation marks and alternations omitted).

On balance, the Court finds that, in this case, potential over-inclusiveness is the more prudent route. For one, anything short of a nation-wide injunction would likely fail to provide the States “complete relief.” Cf. Texas, 809 F.3d at 188 (“[T]here is a substantial likelihood that a geographically-limited injunction would be ineffective because DAPA beneficiaries would be free to move among states,” which would leave Texas open to potential injury); see also Siddique, Nationwide Injunctions, 117 Colum. L. Rev. at 2146-47 (“If one agrees with the district court that Texas suffers some injury from having deferred action beneficiaries within its territorial boundaries, the only way to afford complete relief to Texas and prevent any deferred action beneficiaries from making their way to Texas is by enjoining the grant of deferred action nationwide.”). While a nation-wide injunction may prove overbroad, there is no more geographically limited injunction that protects the States from potential harm.

³² This is neither an explicit or implicit critique of the parties. Rather, it is the frank observation that crafting a perfect remedy would require information that would be insurmountable to gather and maintain.

Second, it is far from clear how burdensome a nation-wide injunction would be on Defendants, given that when “agency regulations are unlawful, the ordinary result is that the rules are vacated—not that their application to the individual petitioners is proscribed.” Nat’l Min. Ass’n, 145 F.3d at 1409.

Third, one of the risks associated with a nation-wide injunction—namely, “foreclosing adjudication by a number of different courts,” Califano, 442 U.S. at 701-02—is not necessarily present here, as the parallel litigation in the Ninth Circuit evidences. See also Spencer E. Amdur & David Hausman, Nationwide Injunctions and Nationwide Harm, 131 Harv. L. Rev. F. 49, 53 n.27 (2017) (noting that “in practice, nationwide injunctions do not always foreclose percolation,” and giving several recent examples).

Fundamentally, given the harm to the States should the Final Rules be enforced—numerous citizens losing contraceptive coverage, resulting in “significant, direct and proprietary harm” to the States in the form of increased use of state-funded contraceptive services, as well as increased costs associated with unintended pregnancies—a nation-wide injunction is required to ensure complete relief to the States.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 14th day of January, 2019, upon consideration of the Plaintiffs' Second Motion for a Preliminary Injunction (ECF No. 90), Defendants' and Defendant-Intervenor's Responses thereto (ECF Nos. 107 & 108), the Plaintiffs' Reply in Support thereof (ECF No. 118), the Administrative Record (ECF Nos. 23, 47 & 126), Briefs of the Amici Curiae (ECF Nos. 110, 112, 113, 115, 117 & 127), and following a Hearing on Plaintiffs' Motion on January 10, 2019, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the Motion is GRANTED.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants Alex M. Azar II, as Secretary of the United States Department of Health and Human Service; the United States Department of Health and Human Services; Steven T. Mnuchin, as Secretary of the United States Department of Treasury; the United States Department of Treasury; Rene Alexander Acosta, as Secretary of the United States Department of Labor; and the United States Department of Labor;¹ and their officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, designees, and subordinates, as well as any person acting in concert or participation with them, are hereby ENJOINED from enforcing the following Final Rules across the Nation, pending further order of this Court:

1. Religious Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,536 (Nov. 15, 2018); and
2. Moral Exemptions and Accommodations for Coverage of Certain Preventive Services Under the Affordable Care Act, 83 Fed. Reg. 57,592 (Nov. 15, 2018).

The Court has considered the issue of security pursuant to Rule 65(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and determines that Defendants will not suffer any financial loss that warrants the need for the Plaintiffs to post security.

APPENDIX F

1. 5 U.S.C. 553(b) and (c) provide:

Rule making

(b) General notice of proposed rule making shall be published in the Federal Register, unless persons subject thereto are named and either personally served or otherwise have actual notice thereof in accordance with law. The notice shall include—

- (1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of public rule making proceedings;
- (2) reference to the legal authority under which the rule is proposed; and
- (3) either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved.

Except when notice or hearing is required by statute, this subsection does not apply—

(A) to interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice; or

(B) when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.

(c) After notice required by this section, the agency shall give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views, or arguments with or without opportunity for oral presentation. After consideration of the relevant matter presented, the agency shall incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and purpose. When rules are required by statute to be made on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, sections 556 and 557 of this title apply instead of this subsection.

2. 42 U.S.C. 300gg-13(a) provides:

Coverage of preventive health services

(a) In general

A group health plan and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall, at a minimum provide coverage for and shall not impose any cost sharing requirements for—

(1) evidence-based items or services that have in effect a rating of “A” or “B” in the current recommendations of the United States Preventive Services Task Force;

(2) immunizations that have in effect a recommendation from the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention with respect to the individual involved; and¹

(3) with respect to infants, children, and adolescents, evidence-informed preventive care and screenings provided for in the comprehensive guidelines

¹ So in original. The word “and” probably should not appear.

supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration.²

(4) with respect to women, such additional preventive care and screenings not described in paragraph (1) as provided for in comprehensive guidelines supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration for purposes of this paragraph.²

(5) for the purposes of this chapter, and for the purposes of any other provision of law, the current recommendations of the United States Preventive Service Task Force regarding breast cancer screening, mammography, and prevention shall be considered the most current other than those issued in or around November 2009.

Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit a plan or issuer from providing coverage for services in addition to those recommended by United States Preventive Services Task Force or to deny coverage for services that are not recommended by such Task Force.

3. 42 U.S.C. 2000bb-1 provides:

Free exercise of religion protected

(a) In general

Government shall not substantially burden a person's exercise of religion even if the burden results from a rule of general applicability, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

² So in original. The period probably should be a semicolon.

(b) Exception

Government may substantially burden a person's exercise of religion only if it demonstrates that application of the burden to the person—

- (1) is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest; and
- (2) is the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling governmental interest.

(c) Judicial relief

A person whose religious exercise has been burdened in violation of this section may assert that violation as a claim or defense in a judicial proceeding and obtain appropriate relief against a government. Standing to assert a claim or defense under this section shall be governed by the general rules of standing under article III of the Constitution.

4. 45 C.F.R. 147.131(a) (2016) provides:

Exemption and accommodations in connection with coverage of preventive health services.

(a) Religious employers. In issuing guidelines under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), the Health Resources and Services Administration may establish an exemption from such guidelines with respect to a group health plan established or maintained by a religious employer (and health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan established or maintained by a religious employer) with respect to any requirement to cover contraceptive services under such guidelines.

For purposes of this paragraph (a), a “religious employer” is an organization that is organized and operates as a nonprofit entity and is referred to in section 6033(a)(3)(A)(i) or (iii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended.

5. 45 C.F.R. 147.131 provides:

Accommodations in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

(a)-(b) [Reserved]

(c) Eligible organizations for optional accommodation. An eligible organization is an organization that meets the criteria of paragraphs (c)(1) through (3) of this section.

(1) The organization is an objecting entity described in § 147.132(a)(1)(i) or (ii), or 45 CFR 147.133(a)(1)(i) or (ii).

(2) Notwithstanding its exempt status under § 147.132(a) or § 147.133, the organization voluntarily seeks to be considered an eligible organization to invoke the optional accommodation under paragraph (d) of this section; and

(3) The organization self-certifies in the form and manner specified by the Secretary or provides notice to the Secretary as described in paragraph (d) of this section. To qualify as an eligible organization, the organization must make such self-certification or notice available for examination upon request by the first day of the first plan year to which the accommodation in paragraph (d) of this section applies. The self-certification or notice must be executed by a person authorized to make the certification or provide the notice on behalf of the organization, and must be maintained in a manner consistent with the record retention requirements under section 107 of ERISA.

(4) An eligible organization may revoke its use of the accommodation process, and its issuer must provide participants and beneficiaries written notice of such revocation as specified in guidance issued by the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services. If contraceptive coverage is currently being offered by an issuer through the accommodation process, the revocation will be effective on the first day of the first plan year that begins on or after 30 days after the date of the revocation (to allow for the provision of notice to plan participants in cases where contraceptive benefits will no longer be provided). Alternatively, an eligible organization may give 60-days notice pursuant to section 2715(d)(4) of the PHS Act and § 147.200(b), if applicable, to revoke its use of the accommodation process.

(d) Optional accommodation insured group health plans (1) General rule. A group health plan established or maintained by an eligible organization that provides benefits through one or more group health insurance issuers may voluntarily elect an optional accommodation under which its health insurance issuer(s) will provide payments for all or a subset of contraceptive services for one or more plan years. To invoke the optional accommodation process:

(i) The eligible organization or its plan must contract with one or more health insurance issuers.

(ii) The eligible organization must provide either a copy of the self-certification to each issuer providing coverage in connection with the plan or a notice to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services that it is an eligible organization and of its objection as described in § 147.132 or § 147.133 to coverage for all or a subset of contraceptive services.

(A) When a self-certification is provided directly to an issuer, the issuer has sole responsibility for providing such coverage in accordance with § 147.130(a)(iv).

(B) When a notice is provided to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, the notice must include the name of the eligible organization; a statement that it objects as described in § 147.132 or § 147.133 to coverage of some or all contraceptive services (including an identification of the subset of contraceptive services to which coverage the eligible organization objects, if applicable) but that it would like to elect the optional accommodation process; the plan name and type (that is, whether it is a student health insurance plan within the meaning of § 147.145(a) or a church plan within the meaning of section 3(33) of ERISA); and the name and contact information for any of the plan's health insurance issuers. If there is a change in any of the information required to be included in the notice, the eligible organization must provide updated information to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services for the optional accommodation to remain in effect. The Department of Health and Human Services will send a separate notification to each of the plan's health insurance issuers informing the issuer that the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services has received a notice under paragraph (d)(1)(ii) of this section and describing the obligations of the issuer under this section.

(2) If an issuer receives a copy of the self-certification from an eligible organization or the notification from the Department of Health and Human Services as described in paragraph (d)(1)(ii) of this section and does not have an objection as described in § 147.132 or § 147.133 to providing the contraceptive services identified in the self-certification or the notification from the Department of Health and Human Services, then the issuer will provide payments for contraceptive services as follows—

(i) The issuer must expressly exclude contraceptive coverage from the group health insurance coverage provided in connection with the group health plan and provide separate payments for any contraceptive services required to be covered under § 141.130(a)(1)(iv) for plan participants and beneficiaries for so long as they remain enrolled in the plan.

(ii) With respect to payments for contraceptive services, the issuer may not impose any cost-sharing requirements (such as a copayment, coinsurance, or a deductible), premium, fee, or other charge, or any portion thereof, directly or indirectly, on the eligible organization, the group health plan, or plan participants or beneficiaries. The issuer must segregate premium revenue collected from the eligible organization from the monies used to provide payments for contraceptive services. The issuer must provide payments for contraceptive services in a manner that is consistent with the requirements under sections 2706, 2709, 2711, 2713, 2719, and 2719A of the PHS Act. If the group health plan of the eligible organization provides coverage for some but not all of any contraceptive services required to be covered under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), the issuer is required to provide payments only for those contraceptive services for which the group health plan does not provide coverage. However, the issuer may provide payments for all contraceptive services, at the issuer's option.

(3) A health insurance issuer may not require any documentation other than a copy of the self-certification from the eligible organization or the notification from the Department of Health and Human Services described in paragraph (d)(1)(ii) of this section.

(e) Notice of availability of separate payments for contraceptive services—insured group health plans and student health insurance coverage. For each plan year to which the optional accommodation in paragraph (d) of this section is to apply, an issuer required to provide payments for contraceptive services pursuant to paragraph (d) of this section must provide to plan participants and beneficiaries written notice of the availability of separate payments for contraceptive services contemporaneous with (to the extent possible), but separate from, any application materials distributed in connection with enrollment (or re-enrollment) in group health coverage that is effective beginning on the first day of each applicable plan year. The notice must specify that the eligible organization does not administer or fund contraceptive benefits, but that the issuer provides separate payments for contraceptive services, and must provide contact information for questions and complaints. The following model language, or substantially similar language, may be used to satisfy the notice requirement of this paragraph (e) “Your [employer/institution of higher education] has certified that your [group health plan/student health insurance coverage] qualifies for an accommodation with respect to the Federal requirement to cover all Food and Drug Administration-approved contraceptive services for women, as prescribed by a health care provider, without cost sharing. This means that your [employer/institution of higher education] will not contract, arrange, pay, or refer for contraceptive coverage. Instead, [name of health insurance issuer] will provide separate payments for contraceptive services that you use, without cost sharing and at no other cost, for so long as you are enrolled in your [group health plan/student health insurance coverage]. Your [employer/institution of higher education] will not administer or fund these payments. If you have any questions about this notice, contact [contact information for health insurance issuer].”

(f) Definition. For the purposes of this section, reference to “contraceptive” services, benefits, or coverage includes contraceptive or sterilization items, procedures, or services, or related patient education or counseling, to the extent specified for purposes of § 147.130(a)(1)(iv).

(g) Severability. Any provision of this section held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to continue to give maximum effect to the provision permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event the provision shall be severable from this section and shall not affect the remainder thereof or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances.

6. 45 C.F.R. 147.131, as amended by 83 Fed. Reg. 57,589 (Nov. 15, 2018), provides in pertinent part:

Accommodations in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

* * * * *

(c) * * *

(4) An eligible organization may revoke its use of the accommodation process, and its issuer must provide participants and beneficiaries written notice of such revocation, as specified herein.

(i) Transitional rule—If contraceptive coverage is being offered on January 14, 2019, by an issuer through the accommodation process, an eligible organization may give 60-days notice pursuant to section 2715(d)(4) of the PHS Act and § 147.200(b), if applicable, to revoke its use of the accommodation process (to allow for the provision of notice to plan participants in cases where contraceptive benefits will no longer be provided). Alternatively, such eligible organization may revoke its use of the accommodation process effective on the first day of the first plan year that begins on or after 30 days after the date of the revocation.

(ii) General rule—In plan years that begin after January 14, 2019, if contraceptive coverage is being offered by an issuer through the accommodation process, an eligible organization's revocation of use of the accommodation process will be effective no sooner than the first day of the first plan year that begins on or after 30 days after the date of the revocation.

(f) Reliance—(1) If an issuer relies reasonably and in good faith on a representation by the eligible organization as to its eligibility for the accommodation in paragraph (d) of this section, and the representation is later determined to be incorrect, the issuer is considered to comply with any applicable requirement under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) to provide contraceptive coverage if the issuer complies with the obligations under this section applicable to such issuer.

(2) A group health plan is considered to comply with any applicable requirement under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) to provide contraceptive coverage if the plan complies with its obligations under paragraph (d) of this section, without regard to whether the issuer complies with the obligations under this section applicable to such issuer.

7. 45 C.F.R. 147.132 provides:

Religious exemptions in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

(a) Objecting entities. (1) Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to a group health plan established or maintained by an objecting organization, or health insurance coverage offered or arranged by an objecting organization, and thus the Health Resources and Service Administration will exempt from any guidelines' requirements that relate to the provision of contraceptive services:

(i) A group health plan and health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan to the extent the non-governmental plan sponsor objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. Such non-governmental plan sponsors include, but are not limited to, the following entities—

(A) A church, an integrated auxiliary of a church, a convention or association of churches, or a religious order.

(B) A nonprofit organization.

(C) A closely held for-profit entity.

(D) A for-profit entity that is not closely held.

(E) Any other non-governmental employer.

(ii) An institution of higher education as defined in 20 U.S.C. 1002 in its arrangement of student health insurance coverage, to the extent that institution objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. In the case of student health insurance coverage, this section is applicable in a manner comparable to its applicability to group health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan established or maintained by a plan sponsor that is an employer, and references to “plan participants and beneficiaries” will be interpreted as references to student enrollees and their covered dependents; and

(iii) A health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage to the extent the issuer objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. Where a health insurance issuer providing group health insurance coverage is exempt under this paragraph (a)(1)(iii), the plan remains subject to any requirement to provide coverage for contraceptive services under Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) unless it is also exempt from that requirement.

(2) The exemption of this paragraph (a) will apply to the extent that an entity described in paragraph (a)(1) of this section objects to its establishing, maintaining, providing, offering, or arranging (as applicable) coverage, payments, or a plan that provides coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services, based on its sincerely held religious beliefs.

(b) Objecting individuals. Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to individuals who object as specified in this paragraph (b), and nothing in § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), 26 CFR 54.9815-2713(a)(1)(iv), or 29 CFR 2590.715-2713(a)(1)(iv) may be construed to prevent a willing health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage, and as applicable, a willing plan sponsor of a group health plan, from offering a separate benefit package option, or a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance, to any individual who objects to coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services based on sincerely held religious beliefs.

(c) Definition. For the purposes of this section, reference to “contraceptive” services, benefits, or coverage includes contraceptive or sterilization items, procedures, or services, or related patient education or counseling, to the extent specified for purposes of § 147.130(a)(1)(iv).

(d) Severability. Any provision of this section held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to continue to give maximum effect to the provision permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event the provision shall be severable from this section and shall not affect the remainder thereof or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances.

8. 45 C.F.R. 147.132, as amended by 83 Fed. Reg. 57,590 (Nov. 15, 2018), provides in pertinent part:

Religious exemptions in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

(a) * * *

(1) Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to a group health plan established or maintained by an objecting organization, or health insurance coverage offered or arranged by an objecting organization, to the extent of the objections specified below. Thus the Health Resources and Service Administration will exempt from any guidelines' requirements that relate to the provision of contraceptive services:

(ii) A group health plan, and health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan, where the plan or coverage is established or maintained by a church, an integrated auxiliary of a church, a convention or association of churches, a religious order, a nonprofit organization, or other non-governmental organization or association, to the extent the plan sponsor responsible for establishing and/or maintaining the plan objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. The exemption in this paragraph applies to each employer, organization, or plan sponsor that adopts the plan;

(iii) An institution of higher education as defined in 20 U.S.C. 1002, which is non-governmental, in its arrangement of student health insurance coverage, to the extent that institution objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. In the case of student health insurance coverage, this section is applicable in a manner comparable to its applicability to group health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan established or maintained by a plan sponsor that is an employer, and references to “plan participants and beneficiaries” will be interpreted as references to student enrollees and their covered dependents; and

(iv) A health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage to the extent the issuer objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. Where a health insurance issuer providing group health insurance coverage is exempt under this subparagraph (iv), the group health plan established or maintained by the plan sponsor with which the health insurance issuer contracts remains subject to any requirement to provide coverage for contraceptive services under Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) unless it is also exempt from that requirement.

(2) The exemption of this paragraph (a) will apply to the extent that an entity described in paragraph (a)(1) of this section objects, based on its sincerely held religious beliefs, to its establishing, maintaining, providing, offering, or arranging for (as applicable):

(i) Coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services; or

(ii) A plan, issuer, or third party administrator that provides or arranges such coverage or payments.

(b) Objecting individuals. Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to individuals who object as specified in this paragraph (b), and nothing in § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), 26 CFR 54.9815-2713(a)(1)(iv), or 29 CFR 2590.715-2713(a)(1)(iv) may be construed to prevent a willing health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage, and as applicable, a willing plan sponsor of a group health plan, from offering a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance or a separate group health plan or benefit package option, to any group health plan sponsor (with respect to an individual) or individual, as applicable, who objects to coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services based on sincerely held religious beliefs. Under this exemption, if an individual objects to some but not all contraceptive services, but the issuer, and as applicable, plan sponsor, are willing to provide the plan sponsor or individual, as applicable, with a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance or a separate group health plan or benefit package option that omits all contraceptives, and the individual agrees, then the exemption applies as if the individual objects to all contraceptive services.

9. 45 C.F.R. 147.133 provides:

Moral exemptions in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

(a) Objecting entities. (1) Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to a group health plan established or maintained by an objecting organization, or health insurance coverage offered or arranged by an objecting organization, and thus the Health Resources and Service Administration will exempt from any guidelines' requirements that relate to the provision of contraceptive services:

(i) A group health plan and health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan to the extent one of the following non-governmental plan sponsors object as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section:

(A) A nonprofit organization; or

(B) A for-profit entity that has no publicly traded ownership interests (for this purpose, a publicly traded ownership interest is any class of common equity securities required to be registered under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934);

(ii) An institution of higher education as defined in 20 U.S.C. 1002 in its arrangement of student health insurance coverage, to the extent that institution objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. In the case of student health insurance coverage, this section is applicable in a manner comparable to its applicability to group health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan established or maintained by a plan sponsor that is an employer, and references to “plan participants and beneficiaries” will be interpreted as references to student enrollees and their covered dependents; and

(iii) A health insurance issuer offering group or individual insurance coverage to the extent the issuer objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. Where a health insurance issuer providing group health insurance coverage is exempt under paragraph (a)(1)(iii) of this section, the group health plan established or maintained by the plan sponsor with which the health insurance issuer contracts remains subject to any requirement to provide coverage for contraceptive services under Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) unless it is also exempt from that requirement.

(2) The exemption of this paragraph (a) will apply to the extent that an entity described in paragraph (a)(1) of this section objects to its establishing, maintaining, providing, offering, or arranging (as applicable) coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services, or for a plan, issuer, or third party administrator that provides or arranges such coverage or payments, based on its sincerely held moral convictions.

(b) Objecting individuals. Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to individuals who object as specified in this paragraph (b), and nothing in § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), 26 CFR 54.9815-2713(a)(1)(iv), or 29 CFR 2590.715-2713(a)(1)(iv) may be construed to prevent a willing health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage, and as applicable, a willing plan sponsor of a group health plan, from offering a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance or a separate group health plan or benefit package option, to any individual who objects to coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services based on sincerely held moral convictions.

(c) Definition. For the purposes of this section, reference to “contraceptive” services, benefits, or coverage includes contraceptive or sterilization items, procedures, or services, or related patient education or counseling, to the extent specified for purposes of § 147.130(a)(1)(iv).

(d) Severability. Any provision of this section held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to continue to give maximum effect to the provision permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event the provision shall be severable from this section and shall not affect the remainder thereof or the application of the provision to persons not similarly situated or to dissimilar circumstances.

10. 45 C.F.R. 147.133, as amended by 83 Fed. Reg. 57,630 (Nov. 15, 2018), provides in pertinent part:

Moral exemptions in connection with coverage of certain preventive health services.

(a) * * *

(1) Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to a group health plan established or maintained by an objecting organization, or health insurance coverage offered or arranged by an objecting organization, to the extent of the objections specified below. Thus the Health Resources and Service Administration will exempt from any guidelines' requirements that relate to the provision of contraceptive services:

* * * * *

(ii) An institution of higher education as defined in 20 U.S.C. 1002, which is non-governmental, in its arrangement of student health insurance coverage, to the extent that institution objects as specified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section. In the case of student health insurance coverage, this section is applicable in a manner comparable to its applicability to group health insurance coverage provided in connection with a group health plan established or maintained by a plan sponsor that is an employer, and references to "plan participants and beneficiaries" will be interpreted as references to student enrollees and their covered dependents; and

* * * * *

(2) The exemption of this paragraph (a) will apply to the extent that an entity described in paragraph (a)(1) of this section objects, based on its sincerely held moral convictions, to its establishing, maintaining, providing, offering, or arranging for (as applicable):

(i) Coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services; or

(ii) A plan, issuer, or third party administrator that provides or arranges such coverage or payments.

(b) Objecting individuals. Guidelines issued under § 147.130(a)(1)(iv) by the Health Resources and Services Administration must not provide for or support the requirement of coverage or payments for contraceptive services with respect to individuals who object as specified in this paragraph (b), and nothing in § 147.130(a)(1)(iv), 26 CFR 54.9815-2713(a)(1)(iv), or 29 CFR 2590.715-2713(a)(1)(iv) may be construed to prevent a willing health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage, and as applicable, a willing plan sponsor of a group health plan, from offering a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance or a separate group health plan or benefit package option, to any group health plan sponsor (with respect to an individual) or individual, as applicable, who objects to coverage or payments for some or all contraceptive services based on sincerely held moral convictions. Under this exemption, if an individual objects to some but not all contraceptive services, but the issuer, and as applicable, plan sponsor, are willing to provide the plan sponsor or individual, as applicable, with a separate policy, certificate or contract of insurance or a separate group health plan or benefit package option that omits all contraceptives, and the individual agrees, then the exemption applies as if the individual objects to all contraceptive services.
